Frost In Sweden May Mean An Early Snow

Stockholm, Sept. 4.—Frosts already are nipping Sweden, foreshadowing the possibility of early winter snow and ruining crops of grain, potatoes and vegetables. News dispatches from Berlin indicate German authorities are anticipating early cold weather in occupied countries, and have decreed that all portable stoves must be declared by dealers and manufacturers. The former must deliver 25 per cent of their stocks to German officials immediately.

FARM

Questions — Answers

QUESTION: Have prospects for more nitrate fertilizer improved recently?

ANSWER: Apparently not. It is estimated now that farmers will be able to get only four-fifths as much nitrogen in 1943 as they received this year. For this reason, agricultural leaders are asking farm people to seed their wheat and other fall grains without nitrogen fertilizer, so as to stretch the remaining supply to meet the needs of crops more dependent on this element. Fruits and vegetables, as well as certain other crops, should get first call.

QUESTION: Should Victory gardeners attempt to save seed?

ANSWER: Since the production of high grade vegetable seed, relatively free from disease, is really one of the most highly specialized phases of agriculture, the home gardener might be wise to buy all of his seed from dealers. Those who do save seed from their garden are likely to have mixed varieties and not too good a quality in their 1943 gardens if they are not very careful.

QUESTION: When should kudzu be mowed for hay?

ANSWER: This is one plant that cannot be mowed anytime the sun shines. If kudzu is mowed in August or September, it makes new growth before frost. This new growth takes the starchy material out of the roots. Then, when cold weather comes along the plants are exhausted and often die out. Well-established stands may provide two cuttings of hay a year, if the first cutting is made in June or July and the second just before frost. Experiments have proved this to be true.

QUESTION: May cull sweet potatoes be fed to hogs?

ANSWER: Yes, says E. V. Vestal, Extension swine specialist of State College. Cull sweet potatoes or cooked Irish potatoes can replace one-half of the grain ration for hogs with good results.
