"The Future is Unlimited" States Ellis Arnall in Discussion

Former Governor Reviews Book, "Shore Dimly Seen"

"Whether we like it or not, fate has decreed that America play an increasingly important part in world affairs, and we must measure up to our international responsibilities," said former Governor Ellis Arnall of Georgia, in a discussion of his book, The Shore Dimly Seen, Monday night, April 21, in the Saint Mary's auditorium. He was introduced by former Governor J. Melville Broughton of North Carolina. President Stone presided.

Faith in Future

"The goal can be reached by the renewal of our belief in the efficacy and our faith in the future. We must recognize that the important ingredient is in the human equation, the minds and hearts of the people. If we want a better world," he went on, "we must begin where we are."

Simple Things

Former Governor Arnall said that we today need to consider simple things. In listing the points that most need our attention, he included a more adequate and better system of education, a more adequate health program, more economic opportunities, balance between agriculture and industry, public works, and the response of the government to the people always.

Future

"The future is unlimited," said Mr. Arnall in answer to the prophets of doom. He elaborated on this by saying that we can have what we wish if we are willing to work. "There is no limitation on tomorrow except that limitation we place on today."

Pertaining to the military, he stated that a strong military force is not our answer, because war cannot be ended by preparing for war. He added that because war cannot be ended by making war more horrible; neither is the atomic bomb the answer. "The United Nations is the pattern upon which we must build."

Youth of Today

In closing, Mr. Arnall stated that we must break down barriers so all doors will be open to the youth of today.

Special Service

A special day for the young people of the Episcopal Church in the United States to receive the Holy Communion has been set aside, April 27. For this reason the Holy Communion service will be held at 11 o'clock on that day rather than on the first Sunday in May. At this later date, May 4, Bishop Penick will be present for confirmation.

"A Fantasy of Nature," Saint Mary's first May Day celebration since the war, will be presented under the direction of Mrs. William C. Guess, May 3, in the grove on east campus, at 4 p.m. Underlying theme of May Day will be the seasons and what they bring to earth. The following synopsis will appear on the program:

"Earth's Flora frolic gaily while awaiting the arrival of Queen Nature. Suddenly there is a pause in the revelry as Zephyr appears to herald the entrance of their Queen. Her Majesty approaches attended by the Azure of Sea and Sky.

"One by one the Seasons pass in review before her.

"The Daughters of Summer arrive and offer the fiery Sun and the Blue Skies as a tribute to their Queen.

"The Daughters of Autumn enter with their offering of Flame and many-hued Leaves.

"Winter's Daughters, cool and aloof, enter with Frost and Snow, who touch the earth with silver fingers.

"Suddenly Frost and Snow flee before Spring, and gentle Verdure awakens Earth's Flora. But now a Spring Storm arises. Its raging fury flattens to the earth the tender Flora. When the Storm has spent itself, the Daughters of Spring fling into the heavens the lovely promise of a Rainbow."
