Western civilization is elected by most of our students as part of the core curriculum. History majors and other interested students acquire a deeper acquaintance with the remote background of their own civilization in ancient history, of its origin, growth, and decline in medieval and modern European history, and of its special regional developments in American and Latin American history.

Like all the other disciplines that constitute the liberal arts, the several social sciences aim to make complete human beings, to equip the student with true freedom by liberating him from narrowness of mind, to broaden his outlook and so stimulate his faculties that he will be able to make the most of his situation and constantly better it.

News In Education

Loyola University and Marymount College, Los Angeles, have agreed in principle to unite under one board of trustees and one president, effective July 1, 1973. Increased efficiency of operation, simplification of administrative structure, and elimination of duplication in some areas are the principal reasons for the reorganization.

At the centennial celebration of Maryville, Sister Harriet Switzer, president of the college, said: "No college can hope for a strong future if it is financially dependent upon a religious order. And it is only in close partnership with lay men and women and with the religious of other orders that the Society of the Sacred Heart can carry on its apostolic mission in higher education."

St. Scholastica has developed what it calls the Winton Plan. The Plan is a self-designed curriculum between the Scholastica student and his self-chosen advisor. Once a student has chosen what he/she wants to do, the College will supply a tutor. The student's decision becomes a requirement.

Mount Mercy College, Iowa, is encouraging high school students who have finished their sixth semester in high school to attend Mount Mercy while completing their high school courses. Mount Mercy is also granting credit by examination for "what you've already learned" by experience.

The College of St. Francis has launched its new Three-Year Degree Program.

CONNECTICUT SEEKS CURB ON TERM PAPER SALES

A Superior Court judge in Hartford this week issued an injunction barring the sale of term papers to students at state colleges and urged the expulsion of students and instructors involved in the process. The suit was initiated by the Connecticut attorney general in cooperation with college officials. Records of a Hartford-based firm were ordered impounded so that the names of students involved in purchases of term papers can be determined.
