

The Giggling Girl

Security guards see most of the paranormal activity that goes on in the old Watts Hospital. They most often hear the giggling and footsteps of young children running around, especially in Ground Watts. One guard claims that many nights he plays hide-and-seek with a young girl in Ground Reynolds, where the morgue used to be. Every time he hears her laugh, he hurries to try and catch a glimpse of her, but to this day he never has.

The Second Watts Spirit

A certain humanities teacher was walking through 2nd Watts late after one of her night classes, when she thought she felt someone looming behind her. She quickly turned around to face whoever was there, but she could see no one. She turned back around and kept walking, but she could still feel the dark presence lurking behind her. She left as quickly as she could, and has not gone back to that area at night since.

An Unforgettable Photograph

On Third Beall, there was a Student Ambassador who was doing a mini-term project on the Psychology of Fear. Her friends and her were discussing ghost stories and legends of NCSSM and Watts Hospital. The Ambassador went to take a picture of her friends but found, in one of the pictures, the outline of a 1940s era nurse. You could see the little hat and all, and when enhanced, you could see the face and outfit outlined perfectly!
