

THE ALPHA GAMMA LITERARY SOCIETY

The Alpha Gamma Literary Society was held January 13, 1925, in Room II. The business was discussed. The program this time consisted of a debate, Resolved: "That a Billy-Goat is More Dangerous Than a Hat Pin." The speaker on the affirmative was Jennie Lee Pickett and on the negative, Edna Chaney. The negative side won the debate, after which John Cartee read some jokes. The president then appointed a new program committee consisting of Jewell Maness, Cornella Pleasants and Cora Mae Hege. As there was no further business the society was dismissed by the president.

The Alpha Gamma Literary Society met January 27, in Room II. The president urged the members to bring the money for their pins. Mr. Hunt made a talk about the coming triangular debate, and urged all to join in and try to help Lexington win this year. The program for this time was a debate, Resolved: "That all Protestant Churches in America Should be United Under One Head." The speakers on the affirmative side were Ina Hunt and Helen Pickard, and on the negative, Frances Pickett and Mary Wilson. The president appointed the same program committee for next time, and as the time was up the society was dismissed.

ALPHA ZETA PINS

The Alpha Zeta Literary Society has at last decided on pins. The pins are octagon shaped, trimmed in gold, with blue engraved in the center and lettering: "A. Z. '25." A large number of pins were ordered.

Miss Martin—"Ever catch your husband flirting?"

Mrs. Estes—"Yes, once."

Miss Martin—"What did you do to him?"

Mrs. Estes—"Married him."

IN HIS GLORY

is the small boy in front of a large dish of our pure and tempting ice cream, with the commission to "get outside of it!" He will obey the order without extra spur. Ice cream is good for children because it contains the best elements of nutrition, as well as being satisfying. Ours excels.
