

Spotting the Eighth Graders

—Enid Ayers and Adele Tuttle

After receiving a permit from Mrs. Hedrick we (Enid and Adele) passed up the stairs to visit the eighth graders. The first room we come to is Miss Raper's class. Looking through the window, we see most of the graduates of Robbins (Adele's Alma Mater) and Grimes (mine). Sitting on the front row is Kitty Philpott busily engaged in English (wanna bet?). Betsy Myers, who is supposed to be doing her English, is passing some pictures around. "Teeny" Redwine is engaged in talking. Herbert Sink, Adele's neighbor, and Richard Smith, Bryce's brother, are "cutting up." Like good little girls, Mary Jane Shirley, Mary Helen Morgan and Maxine Russell are doing their English. Then we slipped silently out of this very quiet(?) room.

Going out into the new building we stop to do some reminiscing about the good ole days when we were freshmen. There we meet Mrs. Berry out in the hall and she looks a little tired. No wonder with 40 or 45 students to teach. Her class is very quiet 'cause they're reading. Amelia Brown looks up and smiles. We wonder if she is reading about horses? Grey Davis, Norma Cohen, Janet Brown and little Joe Bafford are just reading, too. Maybe we missed something in the eighth grade.

When we enter Mrs. Crouse's room we learn that she and her students are correcting N. C. History. Her's seems to be a very good room, at answering questions. Joan Green is busily daydreaming. Don, Patty Hege's little brother, is sitting at the front of the room being a good lil' ole boy. He's really a character, from what we've heard and seen.

Leaving Mrs. Crouse's room, we go back upstairs to Mrs. Gibson's room. Gee, these lucky students. Mrs. Gibson has a very pleasing voice and she surely does know her literature. We hear a small voice at the back of the room, and stretching our necks a little we see a small blonde. She looks like someone we've seen before. Now we know, it's Roland Swing's sister.

Having peeped in at all the doors and having tried to find all of the eighth graders, we return to the Lexhipep room, glad that we are dignified seniors, but realizing that the eighth graders will soon take our places.
