Sea Scouts Compete For Highest Award

Tuesday night seems to be the big night for local Sea Scouts, for last week the Davey Jones and the S. S. Neptune, the two Greensboro ships, were examined by national representatives for the title of National Flagship, an honor coveted by every ship in the United States since it implies the rating, "best."

Seamen of the Davey Jones have begun reconstruction of their ship and are hoping to complete it by the time camp opens. These boys are also making plans for a marine railway to facilitate the entrance and removal of boats from the water.

High Life To Be Shown At Massachusetts Meet

High Life, Greensboro high publication, will go on display March 21 at the third annual conference of the Eastern Massachusetts Scholastic press association to be held at Northeastern university.

One of the outstanding features of this meeting will be an exhibit of the leading newspapers, magazines and year books published by high schools and colleges throughout the nation, according to Miss Florence McCrensky, corresponding secretary for the organization in a letter to High Life, in which she requested exhibit copies.

ALUMNI NOTES

In the play, "Rip Van Winkle," to be given February 28, in Odell auditorium by Greensboro college, five girls, former students at Senior high, will have parts in the production.

Etta Farrar Taylor, a senior and major in speech and art, is property mistress and three girls, Miriam Fincher, Margaret Sullivan and Eva Allen Travis, are on the technical crew. Annie Hall Estep and Doris Davenport, also of Senior, are included in the cast.

The following students, formerly of G. H. S., Beverly Heitman, Elsie Lewis, Barbara Mulligan, all freshman, and Virginia Boren, a senior and major in fine arts, have been commended by Mrs. Mary Braeme Seasholtz, head of the art department at G. C., for their excellent work in art.

These students' work is to be exhibited in the Greensboro college art show in May and also in the State art exhibit in March.

Woman's college town students had an informal supper in the Y. W. C. A. hut, followed by a square dance in the college gym Friday night, February 6.

Jean Berbert, class of '39, president of town students and Dorothy Hendrix, class of '40, social chairman, had charge and were assisted by members of the judicial board. Approximately 75 town students attended in spite of bad weather.

Each town student was allowed to take one dormitory student to the gym for the dance in keeping with the program to promote better relations between town and dormitory students.

Jean Stephenson '41 and Clyde Stephenson, her father, led the square dance.

Later in the spring, the boys will study the erection of buildings and will visit actual construction scenes.

Liberal Arts Essential, States Dean Wagner

While the present trend for college and high school under graduates is to place emphasis on technical courses, Dr. Charles C. Wagner, assistant dean at the school of liberal arts, State College, Pa., urges those interested in the liberal arts field not to be influenced by present emergency conditions.

The fact that many positions are open both in the army and in civilian life where the liberal artists is much in demand, was pointed out by Mrs. C. O. Braswell, of the art department at Greensboro high school. Similarly, particular attention was called to the quarter-master corps, public relations and finances, and the publicity department of the army, by Dr. Wagner.

That the draft boards appreciate the value of the liberal arts student is indicated by the increasing number given deferred ratings to complete their education.

Local Boys Take Part In "Il Trovatore"

High School and opera don't mix, but the natural course of nature reversed at Aycock auditorium February 9, 1942, when six Senior high school heroes appeared as soldiers in the opera "Il Trovatore," an event sponsored by the Lion's Club.

Garbed in mesh hoods, red coats trimmed with silver buttons, khaki pants, long boots and carrying short swords, Dick Kiser, Wade Phillips, Clyde Yancey, Bill Halladay, Mack Arnold and Preston McLaird, led by Maurizio, the hero, engaged in combat with Count di Luna and his forces. They appeared, briefly, again in the third scene of the second act. Sic transit gloria.

Members of A. S. Proctor's distributive education classes have rearranged their display window on national defense.

"Britain did not feel that America entered the war too late. She is confident of our help now, but not after the war," stated C. B. S. foreign correspondent Edward R. Murrow, when interviewed Tuesday night at Aycock auditorium after a lecture sponsored by Bundles for Britain.

Murrow, a native of Guilford county, was born about four miles from Greensboro, in 1907.

"Man of Year"

He attended Washington State university, earning his tuition by dish-washing and similar tasks. He was a member of Kappa Sigma, and was voted by the fraternity as the "man of the year" in 1940.

In last night's interview Murrow declared that the Germans had not and probably would not use poison gases to defeat the British. "If it is used, it will be only as the prelude to an invasion," he said.

"The one incident during my stay in London I remember most distinctly was hearing Myra Hess give a piano recital the morning after a raid—yes, I know it sounds queer, but it's true."

Churchill Silent

Murrow concluded by explaining Prime Minister Churchill's silence on the subject of the escape of the two German battleships Scharnhorst and Gneisenau through the English Channel. "It is customary for the prime minister to report to the House of Commons, but not to the general public," he explained.
