'Opus II-III'

The seventy-six schoolyear shed no light on the students of Theatre Workshop. For each student to receive a grade, they must direct, act and work on a crew for one of twelve one-act plays. They are entitled "Opus," three sets of one-act plays. "Opus One" launched the first third of the workshop one-acts with very few seats empty, on September 30 through October one. The plays were "A Pair of Lunatics," "The Still Alarm," "Death," and "A Picture of Dorian Gray." Eight students directed with a few acting. November 3 and 4 will debut "Opus Two" featuring "War," "The Other Side," "The Dirty Old Man," and "Louder, I Can't Hear You." Don't leave school without talking to the Army Man.

(And don't be surprised if he talks you out of leaving)

If you tell your Army Representative you want to drop out of school and join the Army, he'll tell you where to go. Back to school.

And if you're really serious about dropping out, he'll do his best to change your mind. Chances are he'll work with your parents and your school counselor. To help you work through the problem.

There're a couple of good reasons why your Army Representative wants you to finish high school. One is that, as a guy who spends most of his time working with young people, he wants what's best for them. Usually, that's a high school diploma.

Another reason, to put it bluntly, is that it takes brains to make it in Today's Army. So, the more you know, the better for us. And that means a high school diploma, for openers.

Yet, we know that there are sometimes reasons why a young man or woman feels that he or she must leave school. Most of the time, these reasons are financial.

If you can't work it out so that you can finish high school in your home town, maybe you can finish in the Army. Under a special program that allows you to enlist and complete your education while on active duty.

Getting into this program is tough. You'll have to score high on a special entrance test. After all, you'll be competing with high school graduates for admission.

And before we can talk to you about enlisting you'll have to talk the whole thing over with your folks and your school counselor.

So, before you call it quits with high school, call the Army Man. It could be the smartest call you'll ever make.
