

WSSU Centennial Celebrates History of Education, Service

Winston-Salem State University will commemorate its Centennial in 1992 with a year-long celebration tied to the theme, "Continuing a 100-year Commitment to Excellence."

"This is truly a great time in our history," said Chancellor Cleon F. Thompson, Jr., the university's eighth chief administrator since its founding as Slater Industrial Academy in a one-room building on September 28, 1892, by Simon Green Atkins.

"Just as Dr. Atkins envisioned Slater as a means for improving life for blacks at all levels, so too does Winston-Salem State today," Thompson said. "The difference is, our mission hasn't so much changed as it has broadened - to reach all people who have a desire for higher education - and who, as our motto says, 'Enter to learn, depart to serve.'"

The Centennial activities will underscore both the institution's past and its vision for the future. Among the scheduled events are an African-American quilt exhibition, a women's luncheon with First Lady Barbara Bush as the invited speaker, a concert featuring the popular gospel group "The Winans," and a Centennial Gala celebration during Homecoming.

Dr. Samuel Proctor, a former chancellor of N.C. A&T University and a respected African-American educator, will lead off the observance during an opening convocation on January 15. The convocation follows a flag-raising ceremony that will be held in front of Blair Hall, the administration building.

On February 7, an opening reception will be held in the Digs Gallery for a new art exhibition of African-American quilts.

The Winans, the Grammy Award winning gospel group, are the featured artists in a Centennial concert on March 4.

First Lady Barbara Bush has been invited to deliver the keynote address during a Women's Luncheon on March 21 that honors the wives
