Edwards Lectures

"What College Can Mean To The Student," Subject

On October 10th, the third Thursday Lecture was presented by Miss Edwards, discussing "What College Can Mean To The Student."

Before the talk, Miss Wharton, of the Music Department, played Brahms' "Ballade in G Minor" and the "Sea Chanty", both beautifully interpreted.

In her talk, Miss Edwards said that the purpose of education today is to prepare one to meet any changes which come and to create needed changes if they do not come. "The good our college course does us is dependent upon our attitude toward it and the use we make of the tools offered us: books, friendships, and campus life." She emphasized that the "ultimate goal of a college education is to teach one to observe, meditate, have imagination, and to live with others and if we meet these standards we shall be prepared to meet life as it comes."

State College, Pa.—Penn State frosh are paying for the privilege of being rushed by fraternities this year!

Kansas City, Mo.—There's no such word as depression in the bright lexicon of youthful veterinarians, to judge from the heavy enrollment in Middle-Western schools of veterinary medicine.

No longer to be classed as successors to the old-time "horse doctor", young men—and a sprinkling of young women—are being lured into the profession by the magical words, "jobs waiting."

The demand for good veterinarians still exceeds the supply.
