Ranson Gives Lecture On Electricity

Physics Department Sponsors Duke Instructor in Demonstration

On Monday night, April 5, Mr. Russell Ranson, instructor in electrical engineering at Duke University gave a demonstration in the auditorium on the practical application of a number of new electrical appliances. The lecture was sponsored by the physical science department of the college.

Among the interesting instruments and appliances which Mr. Ranson demonstrated was a miniature electric organ in which all the sounds were made by electrical circuits and the music transposed from one key to another by turning a dial. The practical application of Photoelectric cells was also demonstrated in showing how a beam of light can open the doors of a garage.

One of the most interesting of the Duke engineer's demonstrations was the effect of wall and ceiling surfaces on illumination. Model rooms were used to show how the illumination may be increased without increasing the number or size of lamps or the amount of electricity used.
