To the sound of the rolling drums, to the blowing of the bugles, and to the roar of the flying planes, even May Day festivals go patriotic. In the first picture of the V, May Queen Doris Raley is looking down on her attendants, Betty Sue Goforth, Ruth Edminston, little Sally McGregor and Jimmy Jones. Maid-of-honor, Mary Catherine Martin, Winnie Shealy, and Martha Brandon, (reading from left to right).

Hull. Third row—Peggy Efrid, Ruth Edminston, Eleanor Lazenby, Mary Catherine Martin, Peggy Hamner, Margaret Porter, Jane Montgomery and Nancy Gaston.

The theme of the war-influenced May Day was the story of Betsy Ross and the making of the Nation's Flag. Brilliant red, white, and blue flashed across the outdoor amphitheater as Mars gave way to Venus and Apollo, and the spirit of symbolic victory celebrated joyously.

Betsy Ross, played by Adelaide Henry, seated with the flag she gave to a Nation.
