going to the moon was so far-fetched, that Sam's letter and photo were picked up by wire services and published in newspapers throughout the United States.

His letter drew an answer from Sherman Adams, Assistant to the President, who wrote on White House blue-engraved stationery to thank Sam and to express the President's appreciation. Sixteen years later, NASA sent two men to the moon's surface for around twenty-four billion dollars--and Sam was not one of the men.

Now at Ft. Leavenworth, Kansas working with the combined Arms Research Office, Smith called home during the moon walk and said. "Look--some-one else got my job."

Apollo Blastoff

When man's most historic moment took place in its first stage, a Bessemer City family was on hand to see the blastoff of Apollo II in Florida. Mr. and Mrs. Glen Newton requested to have their vacations this past week so that they could take their four-year old daughter Mary Ann to see the send-off for man's first attempt to walk on a planet in space.

"Mary Ann will be studying about man landing and walking on the moon in school and we just wanted her to be able to say she saw Apollo 11 take off to carry the first men to the moon," said Mrs. Newton, The Newtons visited with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Goodman, who live fifteen miles from Cape Kennedy.

"There were so many people there to see the launching," Mrs. Newton said, "that we couldn't breathe. It was awful," she added.

"When the blast off took place, you saw a flash of fire in the sky. It shook the windows, even fifteen miles away." Prior to the launching, the Newtons had explained to Mary Ann that she would see three astronauts, Neil Armstrong, Michael Collins and Edwin Aldrin, going to the moon.

Following the first stage of the blast off, the Newtons left the place from where they had been watching. Mary Ann explained, "just one man's gone

For those who have the toothand stomach - for turtle meat, now's the time to go turtlebaiting.

Warm days and nights are the times to stock the freezer with turtle meat, says Horace Darby who has the tooth, stomach and know-how for turtle fare. His wife shares the ways of her husband when it comes to turtle-fried ones. Mrs. Darby was the one who recently prodded her husband into making wire baskets which he bakes before he baits them with meat to lure turtles into the basket traps. He set out three baskets near local streams and later in one, found a seven pound turtle. Just right for frying without parboiling, says Mrs. Darby. The largest turtle Darby has caught weighted thirty-seven He caught it near Columbia in South Carolina several years ago. It had to be parboiled before frying. In dressing turtles, Darby says he first cuts off their a patrol leader for Troop 37. The Jamboree contingent representing the Piedmont Council left July 14 from Charlotte by jet. After leaving Charlotte, the group went north by Chicago and then west to Spokane, Washington, where it boarded a bus for the jamboree.

The Piedmont council was joined in nineteen camps by 35.000 fellow scouts from across America and twentythree foreign countries.

The Jamboree week was one of high adventure, Watt reports, with numerous scouting actitivities taking place on the shores of Lake Pend Oreille in the northern Idaho Farragut State Park.
