VETERANS NOTES

Veterans enrolled under the G. I. Bill in on-the-job training courses or in schools below the college level who desire leave of absence should apply for it at their training establishment or school. The Veterans Administration and State.

In the past, these veterans were required to make application at the appropriate VA regional office. Now, they must obtain approval from their employer, supervisor or company official before going on leave.

Compensation is not reduced because of your employment. Recession in compensation is made only on your disability, has lessened in degree.

Early last year I received an adjustment check on my compensation from the Veterans Administration. Do I have to pay income tax on this payment?

No. By law, all payments made under laws relating to veterans are exempt from Federal income tax payments.

The American Legion's old age pension bill for veterans of both World Wars, as amended and recommended for passage by the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs, now has the new number of H. R. 2551.

ARMY DAY QUIZ

CHANGES IN U. S. INFANTRYMEN'S UNIFORMS AND WEAPONS

Pictured here are the uniforms worn by the soldiers of the Third Infantry Regiment, oldest unit in the U. S. Army since its earliest service on the Indian frontier following the American Revolution. Can you pick out the uniforms of the various periods? Write the answers opposite the numbers above and when arranged in chronological order you will have: Frontier Wars (1784), War of 1812 (1812); Mexican War (1846); Civil War (1861); Spanish-American War (1898); World War I (1918); World War II (1944).

ARMY QUARTERMASTER BUYS $31,000,000 PER MONTH FROM FARMERS' MARKET

When Uncle Sam goes to market to supply the Armed Forces with fresh foods he is the American farmer's best customer. During the past year his purchases averaged $31,000,000 a month.

Known as the Market Center System and operated by the Army Quartermaster Corps, this organization purchases ships, stores, and supplies virtually all the perishable subsistence required by the Army, Air Force, Navy, and Marine Corps. In addition to the regular Armed Forces, the Market Center System supplies perishable foods for National Guard organizations while they are in camp, as well as for certain civilians who are entitled to buy from Army commissaries, and for use in the Greek aid program.

The Army deems perishable foods as those requiring refrigeration in shipment and storage. They include fresh meats, vegetables, fruits, fish and other water foods, dairy products, and frozen fruits and vegetables. Nearly 100 different kinds of food items aggregating about 150,000,000 pounds a month are regularly supplied.

The purchases from all over the United States are made on the spot for specified amounts and at quoted prices. Payments are made promptly. And although savings to the taxpayers run high into the millions of dollars per year through this unification of purchases as compared with the local buying by all the military services in competition with each other and without uniform standards, such as are provided before the recent war, supplies are benefited by knowing the quantities and qualities desired, by greatly reduced inspection, and by the opportunity offered all who are intended to offer them.

There are now 100 Market Centers. They are situated at Columbus, South Carolina, Denver, Fort Worth, Texas, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, California; New Orleans, Louisiana; New York, New York; Richmond and Williamsburg, Virginia; and Seattle, Washington. Williamsburg is also the port for European purchases.

Direct contact with companies and individuals who have products for sale is maintained by a crew of field buyers who operate all over the country working out of their field offices. These are the experts who know fresh foods, who have specialized in certain lines, and who work close to face with the producers and those who have them for sale. The field offices are in Boston, Massachusetts; Washington, D. C.; Jacksonville and Miami, Florida; Kansas City, Kansas; Idaho Falls, Idaho; San Diego and El Centro, California; and Mobile, Alabama.
