NAACP, NJC TO MAKE SURVEY ON STATE OF CIVIL RIGHTS IN U. S.

The American Jewish Congress and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People this week announced plans for the publication of separate joint surveys of the state of civil rights and group relations in the United States.

The announcement was made by Dr. David W. Pinesky, Executive Director of the American Jewish Congress and Walter White, Secretary of the NAACP, in releasing the first of these joint surveys, "Civil Rights in the United States in 1948 - A Balance Sheet of Group Relations."

The surveys were being issued, declared Dr. Pinesky and Mr. White in their joint statement, because "the field of civil rights is the most important area of our national life in which democracy remains unfinished."

The 1948 survey issued recently evaluated 140 events in the fields of social, political and economic discrimination. The 35-page report was prepared by Jacob B. Robinson and Morris Berger.

In assessing the progress made during 1948, the survey pointed to certain decisions by the U. S. Supreme Court, toward steps taken by a number of State and local governments, and to some reforms achieved by private action in certain instances.

However, it added, the practice of discrimination and segregation because of race, religion and national origin was still the rule in much of the day-to-day activities of the population. A basic finding of the report was the fact that no major federal civil rights bill was enacted.

"On the other hand," the report pointed out, "in 1948 the American people thought, read and talked about civil rights more than they ever did since the Civil War and Reconstruction periods."

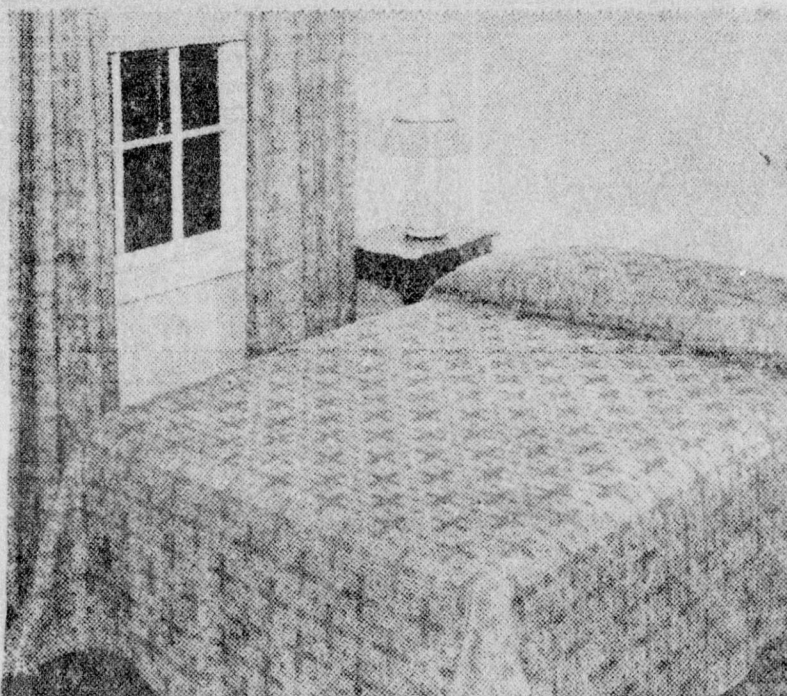

In this connection, the report declared that the searching analysis of the mechanics of our practice of democracy and the detailed program for improvements presented by the President's Commission on Civil Rights shortly before the year opened, reached millions of Americans during 1948.

The program was circulated through publication by the Government Printing Office, reports by a private publisher, and a newspaper publication in the Negro press and massiva distributed by civil organizations.
