Negro Farmers Are Asked To Use Land More Wisely

RALEIGH — People are eating more meat and livestock products now than they were some 35 or 40 years ago, yet many Negro farmers in North Carolina have been slow to change their farming plans to conform to this demand, according to H. A. Johnson, Cumberland County farm agent of the Extension Service.

Johnson says that 10 Negro farmers interviewed in Cumberland County in 1950 used their land as follows: improved pasture, 1 per cent; idle land, 26 per cent; corn, 26 per cent; tobacco, 4 per cent; cotton, 25 per cent; small grain, 5 per cent; hay and other crops, 19 per cent.

The biggest weakness in this land use, in view of the increased demand for livestock products, is the small grain and the high percentage of idle land.

Most of this idle land were used each year to change their farm rotation that could be used toward increasing improved pasture and small grain acreage, Johnson says.

The county agent points out that 20 years from today there will be an additional 40 to 50 million tons of feed in the United States to feed these people. Farmers can still increase their production by 10 to 15 per cent.

"The amount of land available to produce in 1972 is going to be determined by how well your resources are used now," Johnson declares.

683 People Given Jobs In Raleigh During Month

RALEIGH — The Raleigh Jobholders were recent calling for Office of the Employment Security Dept. workers which is now under Commission, serving Wake, Durham, Johnston, Franklin, Moore, Orange, Chatham, Pitt, and Wilson counties.

Employment figures for November show a total of 1,000 new placements, 146 veterans and 143 active congressional and technical employees, 145 placements in November 1951.

The labor situation has changed considerably in the Raleigh area in the last month from the acute shortage of unskilled laborers due to the seasonal inflow of farm people coming in for public work during the winter months.

The present supply of unskilled workers is adequate to meet the current demands. The number of people visiting the local office during the month was approximately 500 more than in October and totaled 7,274. These included those persons drawing unemployment compensation and reporting weekly. There were 320 new applications taken during the month including 163 females and 33 veterans. At the end of November there were 862 active applications on file including 447 women and 136 veterans. Non-agricultural work including 370 women and 134 veterans. Agricultural placements totaled 53 for the month or nearly doubled for November 1951.

Initial claims for unemployment compensation numbered 172 of which 102 were women who are mostly experienced in textiles. These claims included 76 which originated at some point earlier in the year. In comparison there were 294 initial claims the previous month and in November 1951 there were 350. Openings reflected at the end of the month totalled 414 as compared with 715
