Charity Donations Make Brighter Xmas for NC-ians

RALEIGH — Christmas will be brighter this year for more than 100,000 needy families across North Carolina because of the generosity of various clubs and individuals working in cooperation with county departments of public welfare.

This fact was revealed in the report of a survey just completed by the State Board of Public Welfare. On the basis of the facts as reported in the survey it is estimated that over $100,000 will be given by clubs and individuals to carefully selected families whose situation is known to welfare departments.

These families either have special needs beyond that which can be given by essential under the public assistance program or are eligible for such help.

In one Piedmont county, for example, some 350 families will be brought extra Christmas joy through this cooperative plan. Between 250 and 300 families in an eastern county will be aided from gifts totaling over $20,000.

In the great majority of the State's counties most of the clubs, church groups, and other voluntary groups clear through the county welfare departments. This is done to avoid duplication and to gain the advantage of the co-operation of those who work with them with the situations faced by people in need.

Take one far western county, for example, where the three Lions Clubs entertained the area at a Christmas party with all the fixings — and the Kiwanis Club gave a Christmas party for some 50 children — complete with toys, gifts, and a radio broadcast all their own.

In another county the local civic clubs remember not only families in need but also county inmates at the local sanatorium. This year the Kiwanis club also donated a generous amount to bring extra Christmas cheer to those in institutions who would not otherwise be remembered.

A ladies class of a large church approached the welfare department about helping a family it was suggested that they aid an elderly couple who were physically unable to work and who received old age assistance as their main source of income.

Members of the class visited the couple prior to Christmas and get suggestions for help.
