

Atty. General Would Kill Georgia Officials Who Obey Court Edict

Bus Case Decision Is Blamed

ATLANTA, Ga.—(AP)—Georgia Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook last week called for enactment of a law to make it a capital offense, punishable by death or life imprisonment, for any Georgia public official or individual not in the federal employ to assist in enforcing the Supreme Court desegregation decisions.

Cook made his proposal while commenting on the court's recent ruling outlawing segregation on intrastate buses in a South Carolina case.

In discussing the proposed new law, Cook said U. S. marshals now depend largely on county sheriffs to jail persons charged with violating federal laws.

If the Georgia legislature would enact the new proposal, he said, no sheriff or policeman could assist in the arrest or jailing of any bus driver or any school teacher charged with contempt of a federal court in an integration case.

Enforcement would be up to the Department of Justice, and the federal government would have to hire an army of marshals and build jails in Georgia to do so, Cook said.

the Camera Guild

A picture like this offers a nice change of pace from the more usual sunny day snapshots of children.

Snapshots Can Bloom in April Showers

Though poets have hailed April equally for its "golden suns" and its "silver rain," many picture-takers get their spirits dampened by a sudden spring shower. They wrongly feel that they have to put their cameras away until the sun comes out again.

We suggest that you capitalize on the next rainy day and let your camera catch some unusual shots—maybe the youngsters hoppedancing from puddle to puddle, a neighbor walking an unwilling pup, or passersby and their ballet of umbrellas reflected in the glistening pavement.

To be sure that you keep your camera dry, select a sheltered doorway or a window from which to do your shooting. That way there'll be no raindrops spatter-ing on the lens to blur its vision and spoil your snapshot.

Remember, too, to choose a fairly bright rainy day for your picture taking. This will assure good results even with ordinary snapshot film in a simple camera. If you want to, however, you can have special "rain insurance" by loading your camera with extra fast film—it's practically foolproof for shooting on a rainy day!

The next time it rains don't let a little thing like an April shower dampen your picture-taking plans. Weather or not—your camera is always ready to help you get interesting shots for your album. So don't be a fairweather friend trying shooting in the rain, too!
