Dairymen Are Warned About Low Producers

Dairymen, like others in the farming business, are striving for high production. Every dairy herd has some good cows but unfortunately most herds also have some that don't even pay for their keep.

Maxin E. Senger, dairy specialist with the N. C. Agricultural Extension Service, says one low-producing cow can eat up the profit from one of the high producers. When you own assets, the profit from another, it means that two cows in the herd are just breaking even.

This is evidence enough that low-producers must go. When it will be time to cull, cull your over-fat and too-bred cows, Senger says any time is a good time to get rid of this kind of cow but says that the best setting period is over, right now is an especially good time to study the herd records and remove the cows that have been unprofitable during the year.

Cows that are naturally low producers, ones that have been slow breeders, those that have been most frequently bothered with disease and other troubles as well as the older cows, should be looked at with a critical eye when culling the herd.

"Low production should be given the greatest consideration."

SEE GOOD SPEAK GOOD

MOTHER'S DAY is a lovely thought and . . . also a fine time to take a look at yourself to see if you are improving with age. Mature years can be good years if you're prepared to live them confidently.

The three little rules, "see no evil, hear no evil, speak no evil" are sound advice that puts a charming smile on your face. Here's another—"keep the body beautiful as sweet and clean as a spring day." These take constant attention to accomplish, but it's well worth the effort.

Your eyes and smile are the mirror of your heart. Your smile tells, too, whether you've followed the simple rules of dental care . . . namely, brushing your teeth and drawing a 12 to 14-inch length of dental floss gently between them after every meal, to dislodge every particle of food that can cause decay . . . then seeing your dentist at least twice a year.
