HEALTH HINTS

The modern world is full of tensions. As living becomes more complex, it takes a toll on our nervous systems. We worry about meeting bills, about raising the children, about politics, about the hydrogen bomb. All of these things, and many others, are increasing nervous tension, anxiety and insomnia.

Tension is not just a problem for a few high-strung people. All of us are affected by it to a greater or lesser degree. In fact, those people who seem most calm on the outside may be inwardly seething with nervousness and worry. Lack of sleep, poor digestion, shattered nerves—all can take their toll of the human body.

It is possible that these symptoms are becoming more familiar because medical science has learned to recognize them better. It is probable that the complicated lives we lead are making all of us more tense than our forefathers.

Physicians have found that worry and concern about illness can sometimes be more harmful to the patient than illness itself. Nervousness and worry can develop into dangerous high blood pressure.

Fortunately, modern medicine has discovered ways and means of assisting those suffering from nervous tension in its various forms. In the past few years new drugs and medicine have been developed which attack the problem.

Many of these have been highly successful in treating nervousness. The new tranquilizing drugs on the market have been used with a great degree of success. In the hands of physicians they have been found to be safe and effective.

Latest addition to medicine arsenal is a drug called Dorden, developed in the world-famous CIBA Pharmaceutical laboratories. Unlike such drugs as barbiturates, bromides and chloral hydrate, Dorden is not habit-forming, and has no adverse side effects.

"On that question of 'borrowing' the fifth's money, I'll take the fifth, 6th, 7th—and any other amendment that's around!"

Extensive tests have shown that Dorden is highly effective in inducing restful sleep, or as a mild sedative. It begins to act within 15 to 30 minutes, with its effects are of relatively short duration, and leave no "morning hangover."

Many physicians prescribe Dorden for people who wake up during the night. With Dorden they can get back asleep within a few minutes, with its effects are of relatively short duration, and leave no "morning hangover."

Another important quality of this new drug is its safety. It can be given to persons above 6 years of age, and has been especially useful as a sedative for elderly persons.

People of any age, who have an attack of nerves during the day and are unable to sleep at night, may find that Dorden is the answer to their problem.
