Is It Really Important To Drain Your Car's Anti-freeze Every Spring?

A Frank Report from the National Congress of Petroleum Retallers *

Every fall and winter, you're bombarded with warnings to install anti-freeze. You're urged to use "permanent" type for extra protection. You are told that special inhibitors in the anti-freeze will protect against acid. rust, and corresion.

So why drain out all this protection in the spring?

The answer lies in correctly understanding the word "permanent" in anti-freeze. It really means winter long or seasonal, not year after year. All "permanent" anti-freezes can turn acid after one season's use. Air and exhaust gases, seeping into the cooling system form harmful acids. Special inhibitors neutralize these acids as they form. After a full season's use, however, the inhibitors can become depleted - and the solution dangerously corrosive.
