To many North Carolinians, the Scuppernon grape is one of the most delightful fruits grown in the state. It is native to what we commonly refer to as the "Cotton Belt" and for this reason our neighbors in the western counties cannot grow it.

The Scuppernon is a russet variety of the Muscadine family. While some refer to all Muscadines as Scuppernons, this is not accurate, because we have James, Thomas, Mish and Flowers which are black grapes and are also varieties of the Muscadine family.

Where did the Scuppernon variety originate? From the historical facts we have been able to collect, it is believed that the original plant was found growing in Tyrrell County. We know that some very old vines were found in this neighborhood because we have a picture of a vine whose trunk measured seven feet, six inches in circumference.

The James variety was discovered about 1866 by B. W. M. James in Pitt County; the Memory in Columbus County by Colonel T.

S. Memory of Whiteville; the Flowers variety by Mr. Billy Flowers in Robeson County about 1919; and the Mish by Albert Mish near Washington, N. C. So you can see that Eastern North Carolina has played an important part in the discovery and naming of many of our older varieties of Muscadine grapes.

All of the varieties mentioned are self-unfruitful and will not bear fruit unless pollinated. Formerly this was accomplished by planting male vines which furnish pollen but bear no fruit. Now, due to the research conducted by Charles Dearing at the Willard Agricultural Experiment Station, self fruitful varieties have been developed which will pollinate the Scuppernon and other self-unfruitful varieties. Among these self-fruitful varieties are Burgar, Willard and Top Soil. This makes possible greater production per acre because there are no non-bearing vines in the planting.

I have other historical facts about Muscadines and will be glad to communicate with anyone who might be interested.

GREENSBORO—Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Williamson of Greensboro are members of the King's High School faculty in Leaksville.

Mrs. Williamson maneuvered an unusual feat in 1955 when she received her college degree from A and T College. She found time to attend classes, perform her regular home chores, adjust herself to a students study routine, care and comfort her eight children—oldest child is 12—and teamed with her husband on duties around the home.

Mr. Williamson, band director, and fine arts teacher, modern dancing, band, chorus and crafts—at Douglas High School in Leaksville is the only Negro to win the first award of the National Fine Arts Festival in its fifteen year history.

The famous Thor Johnson Conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony had nothing but praise for Mr. Williamson's composition "Parting" which in his opinion was a masterpiece of work.

283 persons entered the contest including two Negroes. Although this award was won by Mr. Williamson in 1953, no Negro has been able to duplicate the achievement since.

A prominent music magazine last week made mention of two of Mr. Williamson's compositions that are being released by King Record Company—"Street of Sorrow" and "Sleep On." Mr. Williamson is also leader of the Rapshodians Orchestra.

He received his Master's degree from A and T the same year that his wife received her B. S.
