STATE'S RIGHTS. Now that Pres. Eisenhower, at the recent governors conference in Williamsburg. Va., has tossed the hot potato of state rights back into the laps of those who have contended most for it, it will be highly interesting to see what the consequences of this impact will be.

The president told the assembled Weaver was unavailable for governors in no uncertain terms that state rights are intermingeably linked with state responsibilities, one cannot be used without Should the board refuse to the other He also reminded the Weaver state executives that there would would have to turn to the courts be more encroachment by the Federal govrnment upon the domain of the individual states unless these states speedily recognized their responsibilities and acted to accept them.

The not so indirect implication of the president's remarks were that the Federal government could not stand idly by and see the needs of American citizens neglected simply because the individual states refused to recognize those needs. Although Mr. Eisenhower was
