Ten From NCC At Integrated Students' Talks

DURHAM — Ten North Carolina College students including Alfred Richardson, Schenectady, N. Y., senior political science major and vice president of the integrated State Students Legislative Assembly, are attending the group's annual meeting at the State Capitol in Raleigh, Nov. 7-9.

All colleges in North Carolina usually send delegates who meet in a biannual assembly similar to the House of Representatives and Senate. The objective is to encourage student debate on major non-issues.

NCC students attending with Richardson are Garry Bell, Washington, D. C.; Lloyd Yancey, Philadelphia; Pauline K. Wynn, Raleigh; Carrie Fair, Asheville; Lawrence Ennett, Wilmington; and Joseph tista, master teachers, counselors and what-have-you.

"In these special fields, I don't want you to be remembered just for your fine Cadillacs, just for your ranch-type homes, just for your bonds, just for your furs, and just for your diamonds," Dr. Mays said.

In conclusion, he reiterated the challenge that students should strive to be known 25 years from now for their skilled surgery, for the bridges they build, for the inspiration they give students as teachers, and for new church and social movements they have spearheaded.
