Several progressive public school systems all over the country have copied the Joplin plan and it has been found to be most effective as an aid to better reading where ever used.

The Washington School experiment with this plan is slated to get underway early in the new semester that begins in this month. Text books and special supplies costing several hundred dollars will be available as the need develops.

At the end of the school year, the results of this plan will be evaluated. It is expected that all of this city's schools will use this reading plan next year if the trial that will be carried on in the Washington and Murphy schools prove the success it is hoped for.

Fisher Issues Farewell Statement

The Rev. Mr. C. A. Fisher, who is leaving his post here as Rector of St. Ambrose Episcopal Church to become rector at the Church of the Resurrection in Philadelphia, Pa., this week, has issued a statement thanking the people of Raleigh for the support they have given him and calling upon them to support a 4-point program for the furtherance of their aspirations.

Mr. Fisher feels that the Raleigh City Council should set up a committee of 75 or 80 persons, depending upon how many thousands of persons are living in Raleigh at the present time. His idea is that there should be one representative for each thousand residents and he feels that would give Negroes 25 or 30 members on this committee.

The purpose of this committee would be primarily to keep the avenues of communication between the different segments of the population open at all times for discussions of problems peculiar to each area of the city. Mr. Fisher pointed out that several southern cities, finding that the past friendly relationship between the races was rapidly developing into bitterness, have already established these bi-racial committees in order to reestablish communications and to secure a better understanding of each other's aims and aspirations.

WEDDING RECEPTION The wedding reception of Mr. and Mrs. Owen Ivy was held at the YMCA on Monday, Dec. 22. Many guests and numerous gifts were in evidence.

Raleigh School Tests New Reading Plan

The Washington Elementary School has been selected as one of the Raleigh elementary schools to test the adaptability of the Joplin Reading Plan.

The Joplin experience proved that the plan could effectively improve the reading ability of practically all elementary students by setting it up for the 4th, 5th and 6th grades, because it has been found that these grade levels and age groups are most important in determining and influencing the future development of all elementary school children.

The operation of the plan is relatively simple. Tesis are made to determine each child's reading ability and at a certain hour each day, these children forget they are 4th, 5th or 6th grade students and assemble in reading classes with other children on the same tested reading level.

Under this plan, poor and slow readers have a better opportunity to receive the help they need and are thereby enabled to improve the quality of their reading. On the other hand, students with more reading abilities are not handicapped by having to wait for the poorer readers after a year's trial in Joplin it was found that in many instances, some of the poorest readers had developed into good readers.

A feature of these reading classes is the 30-minute reading period that follows each class session. For one-half hour, the students are permitted to read anything they find enjoyable. This unrestrained reading assembly naturally stimulates reading desires and increases the students' reading skills.

Several progressive public school systems all over the country have copied the Joplin plan and it has been found to be most effective as an aid to better reading where ever used.

The Washington School experiment with this plan is slated to get underway early in the new semester that begins in this month. Text books and special supplies costing several hundred dollars will be available as the need develops.

At the end of the school year, the results of this plan will be evaluated. It is expected that all of this city's schools will use this reading plan next year if the trial that will be carried on in the Washington and Murphy schools prove the success it is hoped for.
