"Democratic Digest" In Risks Search

The January issue of the Democratic Digest, being mailed to subscribers this week, asks whether the most dangerous security risks in the nation have not been the men who created the climate of opinion which helped demoralize our scientific community. The Digest feels that the answer is yes, and in support of its conclusion cites the Administration's handling of Dr. Robert Oppenheimer, and Dr. Edward Condon, former chief of the U. S. Bureau of Standards, as well as the assault on Fort Monmouth by the late Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, as examples of how the security mania of Vice President Nixon, Senator McCarthy and others destroyed the morale in the nation's scientific community.

The Digest, in an article, "Nixon and Pals vs. the Scientists," recalls, for instance, how Vice President Nixon in the campaign of 1954, boasted of having caused the denial of security clearance to Dr. Edward Condon, the man who organized work at the Bureau of Standards which, according to Edward Teller, hastened the development of the H-bomb by at least a year. The Digest, quoting from a study of the Fort Monmouth investigation made by the Providence Journal, also points out the great price the American people paid for McCarthy's Fort Monmouth investigation, and sums up the results: "Eight men were discharged as security risks. None of them was charged with disloyalty or espionage. All had previously been investigated on the same information and cleared."

The nation is paying today, the Digest concludes, for "the terrifying, unreasoning, anti-intellectual climate of fear and suspicion which was created and perpetuated by late Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy, refined by Richard Nixon and expertly ingested by the Republican Party in the years 1952-1954 to gain political victories." In another article, "Sputnik Crisis Spotlights GOP Anti-School Record," the Digest reviews the Eisenhower Administration's record on aid to education from its first "study" of the situation in early 1953 to the recent failure of the Eisenhower school program because of the refusal to fight for it. "For five years," the Digest concludes, "the Eisenhower Administration has deliberately postponed any major Federal action in the field of education."
