too kindly of the idea of restrict. ing scholarships to the gifted, or above the average student, as proposed by Mr. Eisenhower.

We should never forget that all children are capable of of doing something, all of them, if their talents are properly directed. They can make a contribution to the well-being and stability of this nation. Giving aid to those of superior talent so that they may develop and utilize their aptitudes for the benefit of the nation is all right. But, if the program of governmental aid is allowed to stop there, the nation is in danger of losing the contribution that less talented children can make had help been given them.

Eisenhower's program should be revised to include a.d and help for those in need regardless of whether or not they have five, two, or one talent. We need to stop thinking in terms of only what the relatively few mental giants can contribute and begin waging a fight for the conservation and development of the mental resources of all.
