

Dr. Alvin Eurich Delivers Bennett's "Finals" Talk

GREENSBORO — "If America is to retain its present position as a world power and meet the new challenge which the Russians have supplied, we must examine critically some of the forces which brought it to pass and find ways of applying them to the future," Dr. Alvin C. Eurich, of New York City, declared in his commencement address at Bennett on Monday morning.

Dr. Eurich, who is vice president of the Fund for the Advancement of Education and one of the nation's outstanding educational psychologists, spoke on "America's Genius" just before the 83 members of the 1958 graduating class had degrees conferred.

"If we believe in the motto of 'genius,' he declared, 'we must now broaden our thinking to recognize that other ideas which we do not personally hold may have the same motivating force to other peoples in other countries, such as Russia and China.'

It is important, the speaker stated, to raise questions about our values and to ask ourselves whether or not we are working as hard as our founding fathers for the provisions of the constitution and the Bill of Rights, or whether we have substituted materialism for those ideals.

He explained that Americans usually think of the Russian people as oppressed, impoverished and miserable, but "by their standards, the Russians are no more oppressed and no less free than we are."

Calling attention to the fact that "our ancestors were courageous and creative because they had extravagant objectives," Dr. Eurich said that the time has come "to reactivate the genius of America." He pointed out that while America has made remarkable technological and scientific advances in farming and its allied fields, "we have had somewhat greater difficulty in raising efficiency in the professions and services."

Russia, said Dr. Eurich, has won its goals by a clarity of objectives—military, political, economic, social, educational and scientific and by a total mobilization of available resources to achieve them.

"Where the Russians are looking forward and devising new ways to achieve their aims, we are looking backwards," Dr. Eurich continued, "trying to catch up with goals or in devising ways to gain them."

"We now pay our highest salaries to the heads of large corporations, and to entertainers such as movie stars, athletes and Elvis Presleys, all of whom have substantially higher incomes than our teachers, our scientists or the men who govern our country. In Russia, teachers and scientists rank only under high party officials and heads of large plants in salary and prestige."

To the graduates, he said specifically, "You have had the opportunity at Bennett that our educational system represents. Can you now apply what you have learned to formulate new goals worthy of the American heritage, and to devise ways of attaining them?"

Another highlight of the commencement program was the presentation by Bennett of a citation to Ben L. Smith, retiring superintendent of Greensboro public schools in recognition of "his 22 years of educational statesmanship and his particular contributions in the field of human relationships."

113 Seniors Recieve Degrees At J. C. Smith Commencement

CHARLOTTE — Johnson C. Smith University awarded one hundred and eight bachelor's degrees and five honorary degrees during its 1958 commencement exercises which ended Monday.

The Rev. Herman L. Turner, pastor of Covenant Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., Atlanta, Georgia, in his commencement address, urged the graduating classes to "rise up and build."

Dr. Turner told the class of 1958 that they were called upon to "live in a world of action—undegirded with moral and spiritual values." He referred to "our age of power." It has been pointed out, he said, that "we are terribly intelligent, but not wise; we have knowledge but we do not know how to live and work together; we have power, but we do not know how to use it; we have everything to live with but we do not know what we are living for."

The co-author of the Atlanta Manifesto on the subject of Desegregation, urged graduates to make a clear choice of the road they wish to follow with "a daring faith in God, a burning love for mankind; mobility, flexibility, adaptability; positive and creative living; tremendous energy."
