Claim Southern Move To Elect President In 1960 Is Afoot

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Southern politicians, frothing over reversion of the Supreme Court decision on integration, are reported working on plans aimed at electing their own Presidential candidate in 1960.

According to the move, which won popular endorsement in Alabama's primary election recently, the Democrats hope to forestall popular election of either the Democratic or Republican nominees and throw the selection of the Chief Executive into the House of Representatives, where the southern states have greater voting strength than in the electoral college.

MAY BOYCOTT MAJOR CANDIDATES

This may be done if enough southern states cast their electoral votes for a third candidate. Thus, preventing any single candidate from winning a majority, despite the popular vote cast for any candidate. The next step would be to turn the election over to the House of Representatives, where each state would have one vote.

SOUTH'S STRONGHOLD
In the House the southern bloc would gain an advantage. In the electoral college, the state vote is determined by population; whereas in the house, each state delegation is entitled to one vote, regardless of size or population.

Although the full impact of the plan has not been realized by most northern politicians, some are aware of its capabilities. For instance, Sen. Clifford Case of New Jersey warned in a speech at Trenton Junior college that the South may try to use the plan to rule the nation. The rallying point he said is opposition by deep south states to

Raleigh School's Project:

Washington School Finds Astounding Results In Experimental Reading Work

Washington School has produced astounding results in reading with the new experimental program carried out this year according to a report released to J. W. Eaton, Principal of the school by Dr. Neil Rosser, Director of Instruction for the Raleigh Public Schools, who conducted the survey.

The use of the plan here stemmed from the November meeting of the Superintendent with Principals in which a discussion was held on the improvement of reading in the Raleigh schools. At this meeting, Superintendent Jesse C. Sanderson suggested that two schools in Raleigh try the plan on an experimental basis.

Mr. Eaton asked that Washington School be selected as one of them. Immediately he received the endorsement of his P. T. A. and faculty and after a short period of consultation of teachers and pupils, the program was begun in the 4th, 5th, and 6th grades in the middle of January and ended in May with re-tests and post-tests administered by Dr. Rosser.

The results of these tests show that the 213 pupils in these grades made an average gain in Reading of more than one year's progress in less than a 4 month's time. The average gain per pupil was 9 months or the equivalent of a school year for the 6th grade, 11 months for the 5th grade, and 11 months for the 4th grade.

A report reveals that 8 pupils moved three grades higher in Reading, 28 pupils gained two years and 87 pupils made at least one-year's progress in that time.

Another significant result of the report shows that these students read 6844 books from the school library or an average of 32 books, coinciding with this reading program. Five pupils read more than a hundred books, 25 pupils read more than 50 books and 93 pupils read more than 20 books. Book reports and comments whispered to the teacher were used to verify the accuracy of these facts.

Principal Eaton says that the teachers in the reading program observed such marked improvement in the school that they recognized its continuation for another year. In their evaluation of the program they state that they were able to cover more ground and teach more skills because the program gave the students a feeling of success, removed emotional blocks, and made reading an exciting experience for many who had previously been handicapped. He says that although the program was in operation a short time, it has created a new emotional climate for all the children, thereby helping the gifted child as well as the slow learner.

"It has not only raised the reading level and increased the circulation of library books but it has also improved study habits and scholarship, increased daily attendance, and curbed many disciplinary problems; thus making the children happier and better adjusted than before," comments Mr. Eaton. He points with pride to many incidents substantiating these statements and facts of which the following are typical.

Music provides recreation for youngsters and they are always eager to leave subject classes for this special one-a-week period. One day, a number of students were reported to be "cutting" strings. The Principal found them in the newly created Reading Laboratory.

John is a 6th grade youngster whose environment could not be the envy of any of his class mates. He attended school only when being forced by the truant officer. He became so fascinated with the reading class that he didn't miss a single day of it. After reading was over, he was reported many times for having slipped off the school grounds. He said, "The Reading Laboratory is lots of fun."

Minnie was a retarded reader who always enjoyed mechanical toys and devices but not books. In the Reading Laboratory he read about 20 books with delight. One Sunday morning he slipped one of his books just before that morning's Sunday School to finish reading in Church because he was so engrossed in the story. When he was asked that such an act would be profitable, he agreed to put the book away for the Services. Upon returning home he finished the entire story before dinner. His reading level jumped one and one-half grades in four months.

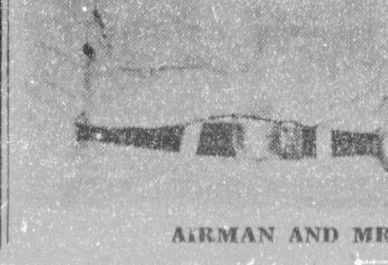

Bessie, a 7th grade reader who has always enjoyed high scholastic rewards, stressed all her previous records and secured the highest number of books in the entire laboratory.

Miss Delores Peterson Weds Airman In Quiet Ceremony

Miss Delores E. Peterson and Airman 1-C William McClean were united in marriage in a quiet ceremony here Sunday afternoon, June 8. The Rev. J. W. Jones officiated.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Peterson of 827 Ellington Street, Raleigh, and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Arheal McClean of Brass Street, Raleigh.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a ballerina-length dress of white chantilly lace over taffeta. Miss Delores Johnson was maid of honor and
