

Dunn's Esso Servicenter Ready For Gala Opening

Gala Opening Planned For Station Here

Thursday, Friday and Saturday will be the letter days in the history of another Raleigh business. These days will mark the opening of the new Dunn Esso Servicenter, located at Cabarrus and Bloodworth streets.

The business is owned and operated by Eugene Thomas Dunn. His rise in the business world has been steady and consistent. He was born in Raleigh and has been engaged in some type of business for a number of years. The war caused a break in his career, but as soon as he was released from the army he took over at his present location.

In 1957 the Esso Standard Oil Company found that the quarters were too small and decided that the volume of business done by him warranted larger and more modern facilities. The old station was torn down and a new one started in the early part of this year. During the construction of the new building there was very little interruption to his business and the users of his high quality service were inconvenienced very little, if any.

The building is a credit to Raleigh and gives Mr. Dunn an opportunity to better serve the public. He uses Esso products exclusively and is able to offer the kind of service that only Esso dealers can offer. Aside from a bumper-to-bumper service, as can be found at any Esso station, he offers a up-to-the-minute road service.

Mr. Dunn is a product of the local schools and is married to the former Miss Anne Belle Jones. They have three children, Louise, 11, Millie, 7, and Eugene, Jr., 2. They reside at 320 E. Davis St. He, along with the other members of his family, are members of the First Baptist Church. He is an avid baseball fan and even though he gets little time off, he loves to listen to football games and occasionally has an opportunity to see one. He also hunts when he finds time.

The opening will feature continuous music for the three days.

Seventh Day Adventists Mark Historic Decision

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (ANP) — Seventh-Day Adventists are marking the 55th anniversary of the movement of their world headquarters from Berrion Springs, Mich. to Washington, D. C.

Dr. Walter R. Beach, world secretary of Seventh-Day Adventists, said: "In the perspective of later events, the removal of the General Conference (world headquarters) from Battle Creek, Mich., to the nation's capital was a momentous and far-reaching event. It marked in point of fact a new era in the expansion of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church."

Today's Adventist world headquarters is a multi-story modern office building located just inside the District of Columbia line in suburban Takoma Park. From its offices at 6840 Eastern Avenue, N. W., is directed the activities of more than 46,000 ministers, physicians, Bible instructors, administrators, teachers, etc., in 185 countries and the annual distribution of church funds totaling more than $50,000,000.

WORLD MEMBERSHIP GROWS

World membership of the Seventh Day Adventist Church currently approaches 1,200,000 persons.

Adventist world headquarters oversees the movement of more than one missionary family overseas every day of the year. It directs an education program which utilizes nearly 3,000 schools ranging from elementary through university levels teaching more than 200,000 young people, and it provides direction for religious publishing activities of 43 publishing houses around the world which published literature in 214 languages in 1957 valued at $21,547,157.

Medical offices of the world headquarters direct 137 hospitals and clinics of the church, most of them overseas and 10 medical centers launches on South and Central America's vast rivers.

SEVERAL FACTORS INFLUENCE TRANSFER

Movement of the Adventist headquarters to Washington, D. C., followed a decision of the denomination's General Conference as-sion held on March 27, 1905, in Oakland, Cal., that greater Adventist representation in the Eastern United States should be made. Close proximity to eastern emporium points for the convenience of departing missionaries of the church was also a factor in the move.

When the church headquarters left Battle Creek, it left behind a medical institution of international reputation in the Battle Creek Sanitarium which was operated by Dr. John Harvey Kellogg, brother of W. K. Kellogg, of breakfast cereal fame. Battle Creek Sanitarium was closely associated with Adventist headquarters there.

By 1975 it is estimated that 10 to 12 million tons of fertilizer will be used annually. This would be an increase of 75 to 100 per cent over today.
