

Berlin College Lifts Ban On Tan Medical Students

BERLIN, Germany — (AP) — Negro medical students will be allowed to observe white women giving birth—if the patient has no objection—it was announced last week.

City officials made the order public after the newspaper Morgenpost disclosed that a professor had ordered a Ghana med student to leave a class witnessing a delivery, at Free University.

The incident occurred last January when Prof. Felix von Radecki asked Samuel Kwesi Dadzie-Arthur to leave the clinic. The professor said he feared the presence of a Negro might cause the expectant mother anxiety.

Morgenpost reported that the mother had given her consent previously to the Ghanaian's presence in the delivery room. Ghana officials complained to the West German foreign office and the ban subsequently lifted.

Ike Leads Cornerstone Laying For A $20 Million Building

NEW YORK CITY—The leaders in the world of Christendom reached a new high here when President Eisenhower led more than 10,000 in a cornerstone laying ceremony at the $20,000,000 Interchurch Center.

Thirty-seven communions were represented and took part in the ceremonies as part of procession that marched to the strains of music furnished by several groups.

Bishop W. J. Walsh, senior priest of A.M.E. Zion Church, was the only person of color who appeared on the program. He read the second scripture, taken from I Corinthians 8:10-13 and Hebrews 3:4.

Bishop Herbert Welch, 95, oldest Methodist bishop in service, prayed the opening prayer. Rev. Norman Baugher read the first scripture. David Rockefeller delivered the opening address and told the purpose of the building and related how happy he was to take part in such a ceremony. Honorable Charles Malik, president, General Assembly of the United Nations, spoke on "Under One Roof." He demonstrated what could be done if all nations would decide to open

SMALL BUSINESS

By C. WILSON HARDER

One of the most interesting battles in the fall election campaigns will be fought out in the State of Missouri. For there the voters of the "Show Me" state are being urged by big interests to uphold a new principle.

Briefly, the principle is this: "What is sauce for the goose, is not necessarily sauce for the gander."

Through a backdoor approach, a move is on to throw the state open once again to branch banking.

Missouri once had branch banking. The financial power of the state became pretty well concentrated in St. Louis.

And while Missourians presumably like fairly well the long time favorite song "Meet Me in St. Louis," they found they didn't relish the idea of going to St. Louis to meet their money. So branch banking was outlawed.

Now the Big Three of metropolitan Missouri banking have got out onto the hot spot of the most fantastic pieces of proposed law that has ever been written.

If the law is passed, bank metropolitan centers will be permitted to open and operate branches in an area of 12 miles around the metropolis.

Only two cities would qualify for this, St. Louis and Kansas City. And by going out 12 miles in all directions from the city limits, these banks could set up branches in other counties.

National Federation of Independent Business

But now here is a most curious paradox in the proposed legislation. Outside of these two cities, other banks could also open branches, but not outside of their home counties.

That's the Big Three of Missouri banking want in effect, permission to go practically where they please, while the more than 500 independent banks in Missouri would be pretty well corralled on their home reservations.

In 1837 General Andrew Jackson, then president, led the fight which knocked out the private banking monopoly known as the Bank of the United States. Because of the power his group wielded over the economy, the nation had gone into a serious depression, with the rural areas brought to ruin.

But since 1837, the need for competition for money and credit has become even more pressing, because since those early days of the Republic, the national economy now practically runs on credit, whether it be harvesting crops, or selling a new refrigerator.

If banking can be brought under the Big Three domination in Missouri, there is literally billions of dollars of profits to be made.

Of course the Big Three of Missouri Banking do not claim they want to drive out the independent banks. But then, the wolf look some time before letting it be known to Little Red Riding Hood that he actually was not her sweet old granny. And it is quite probable, come election day, the Missouri voters will not be quite so naive as Little Red Riding Hood was for a while.

Whites Want Schools Reopened "With Or Without Integration"

RICHMOND, Va.—(AP)—Virginia white people are slowly but surely waking up to the cost and calamity of the state's massive resistance to school desegregation.

White rallies are also disturbed over the crisis in the public school system of the state because of the closing of nine schools in the state to prevent integration.

The Roanoke World-News published an editorial on Oct. 3 under the title "We Must Find Another Way" saying:

"It would be an irreparable loss if the public school system were to be abandoned. Devotion to a lost cause should not blind us to the damage that collapse of public education would do to generations of Virginia children."

"For that reason it is essential that the people of Virginia now assess the realities of their situation. We must find some method that will satisfy the minimum demands of the federal courts and at the same time guarantee an adequate education for all the children of Virginia."

The Roanoke Times, the morning newspaper, published an editorial under the head "To Save Education Virginia Must Quickly Chart Another Course." The editor said in part:

"The program of massive resistance has now come to the bitter and inevitable finality. White schools have closed in three Virginia localities in order to prevent admission of a few Negro pupils as ordered by the federal courts."

"The present course" will ultimately lead to one of three things: integration of schools, abandonment of public education, or rebellion.

"Since rebellion is unthinkable, and the shutting down of all public schools would be calamitous, we must face squarely the fact that total resistance, legal or otherwise, can go no further."

The Times has urged Governor Almond to call a specific session of the General Assembly to plan "a new program conforming with the minimum requirements of the Supreme Court's decisions and providing continuity and order in the process of education... the welfare of Virginia's children are at stake."

Welch To Scout For Philadelphia Team

CHICAGO — Winfield Welch, a member of the Harlem Globetrotters' traveling secretarial staff during the winter, joined the Philadelphia Phillies baseball organization as a full time scout this week.

An outstanding manager in Negro baseball for some 30 years, Welch developed many outstanding players when he piloted such Negro American league clubs as the Birmingham Black Barons, New York Cubans and Chicago American Giants.

He led the Barons to the Negro American league pennant in 1953. His teams never finished lower than third in the circuit's history. Among the players he sent into organized baseball were Luke Easter, Larry Raines, Joe Durham, Art Wilson, Piper Davis and Dan Bunkhead.

Tommy Gallagher, Phillies' executive, said Welch's specific job will be to sign Negro prospects. He added:

"He will not be confined, however, to that particular field. We will expect him to recommend any and all good prospects. He will be free to travel any place in the country to check on players."

"A great deal of his time, however, will be devoted to Negro college teams and semi-pro clubs in the south."

It will not be necessary for Welch to sever his connection with the Globetrotter organization, Abe Saperstein, owner of the famous Trotters, said this week.

"Welch will retain his position with us during the basketball season in the same capacity he has worked for the past twenty years. When our season is over in March, he will join the Phillies. It's a perfect situation for everybody concerned."

For Bennett College: Slate New Residence

GREENSBORO — Authorization for construction of a new residence hall costing approximately $315,000, was voted by Bennett College trustees during their annual meeting at the college Saturday.

President Willa B. Player and Mrs. Julius W. Copps of Greensboro, chairman of the buildings and grounds committee, were given authority to enter into negotiations with the Housing and Home Finance Agency of the federal government for assistance. The new dormitory will house 108 students.

The trustees also authorized the implementation of fringe benefits to faculty and staff members through the establishment of a major medical insurance plan under the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association (TIAA), with the participants and the administration sharing the costs on a 50-50 basis.

Dr. Frederick D. Patterson, of New York City, board chairman, who presided, was requested to appoint at an early date a development committee to be composed of trustees, faculty-staff, students, graduates and members of the Greensboro community, to draft a program of long-range development for the college over a 10-year period.

President Player, in making her annual report to the board, was assisted by the college's Danforth Community Workshop team, composed of Mrs. Louise G. Street, Dr. Chauncey G. Winston, James C. McMillan and Francis L. Grandison.

The trustees also heard reports from the investment, legal and grounds committees and voted to hold their annual meeting on October 17. Mrs. E. L. Gillman, of Durham, recently elected to take the place of the late Mrs. W. H. C. Goode, was introduced.

Prior to their meeting, the trustees went to Pfeiffer Chapel for a memorial service for Mrs. W. H. C. Goode, one of the original founders of the institution as a college for women. Dr. Patterson presided and Mrs. E. N. Rodeheaver, board member from Winston-Salem, Indiana, delivered the tribute to Mrs. Goode.

Following the board meeting, the trustees attended a luncheon in the home economics dining room and from 4 to 6 p. m., they were honored at a tea with faculty-staff members at the president's home.
