In making comparisons between Russia and the United States, Attorney Powell got greatest satisfaction from the fact that our standard of living is far superior to Russia's.

Russia can concede this and still remain a mighty menace to democracy. There are many reasons to fear that a nation with the highest standards of living will also become soft and flabby and unfit, in a life and death struggle for survival, to compete with nations with lower standards of living.

In other words we can take little comfort in conceding educational superiority while our only boast is luxurious living. There is something about luxurious living that has always undermined great nations and civilizations.

What does it profit our nation to boast of its automobiles and televisions and refrigerators and radios and all that, while Russia without them outdistances us in the race of education.

Better a thousand times to live the simple life, materially speaking, and stay up or ahead in the race of education than to indulge in luxurious living and expose ourselves to the evils of high living.

It is true we have high standards of living, but it is also true that race prejudice like a cancer is eating at the vitals of our nation.

The purpose of this article is to point out—and deplore—the imminent dangers that confront us in our struggle against communism with its highly accelerated system of education, while a large sector of our nation is threatening to blot out its public school systems.

Already several communities in Virginia and Arkansas have closed their public schools in the face of the threat of the Soviet Russia to run away with the education show. Can a nation thus imperiled afford the luxury of such nonsense?

If this country is finally overrun with communism, the blame therefore can be laid at the doors of the Neurophobe segregationists and their determination to maintain segregation, even if such course leads directly into the hands of the communists.

Our falling behind in the international race of education and our current threat to let race prejudice close the doors of our schools, is easily a tragedy in the making and that tragedy is handing over, to Soviet Russia, our great nation on a platter.

Seasonal Farm Slate Completed

The season has arrived for the establishment of the farm schedule to be observed in the Raleigh area including Wake, Franklin and Johnston Counties for the farm placement representative, C. S. Barnes, whose office is at 323 W. Hargett Street in Raleigh stating where he may be contacted for interviews regarding needed farm workers.

This will include share croppers, farm hands or families by the year, month, week or day and, in fact, any type of workers needed in connection with agricultural work. It also includes work of any type in connection with agriculture that applicants would be interested in.

Beginning immediately and through the month of February, the following schedule will be followed by Mr. Barnes:

Tuesday: Smithfield, County Agent's Office, 10:00 a. m. to 11:00 a. m.

Wednesday: Willow Springs, Woodard's Store, 10:00 a. m. to 11 a. m.

Thursday: Rolesville, Robertson's Store, 9:00 a. m. to 10:00 a. m. Louisa, County Agent's Office, 11:00 a. m. to 12:00 p. m.

Friday: Raleigh Local Office, Employment Security Commission 323-325 West Hargett Street, 10:00 a. m. to 4:00 p. m.

Ladies Eye Men's Shoes As Gifts

As Christmas American women have stepped out of the shirt-sleeved gift rut and into the men's shoe department.

Masculine footwear is attracting the feminine eye and budget. Catering to this trend, a share of her holiday buying more shops are showing men's leather shoes in attractive new styles that make welcome gifts. What every woman knows, that it takes the right shoe to enrich her own costume, points up the reason for her choice of footwear reflects the continental style influence as a gift item this year. If his suit once, a fashion-wise wife knows that he needs a pair of the slimmer shoes to complete his wardrobe. Last winter's scuffed but sturdy brogues simply won't do for the holiday social season ahead.

Discretion is the better part of valor, too, if she plans to go dancing this New Year's Eve. Many a subtle lady has made certain that her partner will be lightfooted that night wearing the feather-weight dress oxfords she has wrapped and waiting for Christmas Day.

If the man in question is the active type, his shoe should fit his temperament. A chukka boot in black grained leather will give purpose to his stride. Today's successor to the rougher desert boot has snail and style with a modified square toe and a strap-and-buckle closure.

Salespeople in the women's shoe departments are welcoming many more gift purchasers this year. You'll find them very helpful even if you're just browsing among the attractive holiday displays. Armed with years of experience, a veteran salesman may well come up with a suggestion that will provide a man with all the style, comfort and wearability that is built into a well-cut leather shoe.

Where size is a problem, or when you are certain he would enjoy making his own choice, put fashion at your man's feet this Christmas with a festive gift certificate from his favorite shoe shop.
