

Say Southern Attitudes Changed For Better Since Court Decision

NEW YORK — (AP) — "There is a climate of opinion among white Southern officials more favorable to integration since before the Supreme Court decision." This was the theme of a talk given by James H. Hubert at a forum of the Catholic Interracial Council here recently. Hubert had just returned from a tour of the southern states with the National Association for the Advancement of Negro Country Life, which he serves as executive director.

The speaker illustrated his point by explaining that a number of recently constructed, modern, well equipped schools have been established for Negroes in Georgia and other Southern areas. He found that public officials there were open to suggestions for improving judicial, housing and recreational facilities because they knew deep down that eventually segregation would disappear and the schools, hospitals and parks would be enjoyed by all the people, white and Negro.

"There is a change in attitude in the south today and we can no longer depend on the lights that guided us in the past," he said. He added that there are more white people in the south today who are willing to go along with organizations like the Catholic Interracial Council, and cited the statement condemning racial segregation just released by the Catholic Bishops of the United States as an encouraging factor which will contribute to improved interracial understanding.

the St. Louis Area." M. Lee Bohannon, executive director of the Urban League, said last Saturday, that Negroes are not employed in many industries, despite the increased Negro labor force.

"More economic opportunities for Negroes are needed, although some improvement is evident," he said. Bohannon stated that Negro labor "was hit particularly hard by the 1957-58 depression."

The report reviewed income and employment, housing, health and welfare and quasi-public services of Negroes in the last year, he said.

During the recession, one out of every five Negro workers was unemployed, he continued.

A study of income of non-white families in the last 12 months showed that three out of 10 had annual incomes of less than $2,000, four of 10 had incomes of $2,000 to $4,000 and one out of five between $4,000 and $6,000, he stated. Only 7 1/2 percent had annual incomes of more than $5,000.

Bohannon noted that 80 percent of the Negro families in St. Louis live in slum or blighted areas, but the total number of housing units available to them continues to increase, he observed.

Availability of more private housing for Negroes, he continued, "is occasioned by the movement of white families to the county since less than one percent of all privately built housing in the St. Louis area is open to Negroes."

Displacement of 4200 Negro families from the Mill Creek area (for redevelopment of the slum area in the heart of St. Louis) poses "a very serious problem," Bohannon asserted. Many will neither qualify for nor accept low-cost public housing to be constructed in the area, he said. In the absence of community facilities, he stated, the group will move to the west and northwestern sections of the city, making more critical the already existing potential housing problem in those areas.

"It is significant," Bohannon pointed out, "that Negro home-ownership is on the increase." Twenty-five percent of the units occupied by Negroes are owned by them, he said.

If present and future planning and programming for a standard and a more progressive St. Louis is to be realistic, practical and successful, it will of necessity "have to be more concerned than they have been to date with the conditions and problems of the Negro," Bohannon concluded.

"What do you think, Doctor?"
