DEAR SALLY

BY SALLY SHAW
DEAR SALLY: I'm going with a girl who is sweet and lovely and wonderful in every way. There's only one thing about her that keeps bothering me, and that is her manner of making herself up. She's forever doing something "extreme" to her hair, to her face, or to her fingernails, and I think it ruins her natural beauty. Her latest innovation has really thrown me. She has removed her natural eyebrows and now paints on some artificial ones about a half-inch or so above the old line, and as a result, she now has a startled, "what's up" appearance about her. Do you think it would be all right for me to say something to her about this, or is this none of my business? I do love her very much. JIGGS.

DEAR JIGGS: The fact that you love the girl should make it some of your business. Be tactful. Tell her what a wonderful job Nature did on her in the first place, and that you think she would look ever so much better if she allowed Nature to take over again.

DEAR SALLY: I'm a bride of three months, and now I'm worried about a dominant streak my husband is already beginning to show. Ever since I was graduated from college two years ago, I've carried on an extensive correspondence with college friends, both male and female. My husband is stoutly maintaining that it is wrong for me to correspond with other men, even if everything is platonic. I hate the idea of breaking off with these people, because they ARE very good friends and our letters have never been anything but friendly and informative—never the slightest hint of romance. Do you think my husband is in the right to demand this of me? GINNY.

DEAR GINNY: A mature man would tolerate his wife's correspondence with old college friends. I think your husband's attitude is one not so much of dominance as of personal insecurity.

DEAR SALLY: What can a girl do when, after three years of trying to be a good wife and mother, she realizes that she still is in love with a former sweetheart with whom she went steady for two years previous to breaking off and meeting her present husband? My husband is a good, kind, and considerate man, but he arouses no flame in me. I bumped into my former boyfriend a week or so ago, and something clicked in both of us. He wants me to leave my husband and marry him. Do you think I could do this, or must I resign myself to a whole lifetime of unhappiness because of one foolish mistake? I'm still very young, only 21 years old. Please advise me. SORRY

DEAR SORRY: Young though you are, it's about time you were growing up and began appreciating that "good, kind, and considerate man" you now have. You made your decision three years ago—now stick with it and make it work. Too often the glamour of that second marriage wears off sooner than that of the first marriage—and besides, you have the big responsibility of motherhood to consider.

DEAR SALLY: I'm a widower of 53, and have been dating a widow of 49 for the past several months. I've mentioned the idea of marriage to her, but she keeps telling me she is not quite ready yet to make such a decision. She does go out with several other men, but she has given me every reason to believe that I'm No. 1 with her. My problem is that, while she exhibits affection toward me when we are alone, she never gives the slightest hint of it when we're with other people, such as her family and her children—not even letting me hold her hand. I think this is foolish for a woman of her age, and I don't like being compelled to hide my real feelings for her in the presence of others. What do you think

Ga. Hospital Gets Negro Woman Medic

ATLANTA (ANP) — The Fulton-DeKalb hospital authority last week approved the appointment of the first Negro woman doctor, Dr. Gwendolyn Cooper Mannings, to the Grady Memorial hospital visiting staff.

Dr. Mannings is a graduate of Meharry Medical college at Nashville and is certified by the American board of internal medicine. She was accorded all rights and privileges given other visiting staff physicians who serve at Grady without pay.

About a month ago the hospital accepted another Negro, Dr. Asa G. Yancy, as a visiting staff physician. Grady Memorial is the $20 million downtown facility administered by the Fulton-DeKalb hospital authority.

Interviewed For Jobs Overseas

GREENSBORO — Senior students at Bennett College were given an opportunity for personal interviews with Robert Bell, representing the Agricultural Technical Assistance Foundation of New York concerning employment opportunities in the association's overseas program.

The association, which is assisting in the development of programs in Africa, North Borneo, Sarawak and Thailand, is particularly interested in employing home economists, normal school teachers, secretarial and business training specialists and persons trained in physical education and social welfare.

On The Home Front

(Items this week from Wake, Harnett and Caswell Counties.)
FAMILY FOOD SUPPLY
An adequate food conservation plan is the number one goal of Mrs. Betty Stinson of the Bazell Creek community in Wake County.

According to Mrs. Mary Graham, assistant home economics agent, Mrs. Stinson is observing the following practices in producing an ample supply of food: locating garden in new spot; selecting certified vegetable seeds; treating land for diseases; planting different kinds of vegetables; and cultivating on time.

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT
In the McLean Chapel community, progress is being made on their community development projects. Mrs. Ida Hinnat, home economics agent, says three of the four churches have already seeded their lawns and ten families have ordered name plates for their mailboxes in the Harnett County community.

She says people passing through the community can already spot improvements being made.
FAMILY LIVING ACCOUNTS
Who do families need family living accounts? Miss Helen Payne, home economics agent in Caswell County, says families need to develop managerial knowledge and skills in using resources they have. She says it is important to raise the family income but they should know how to manage what they have first. Homemakers consider managing the family income one of their most important responsibilities.

about this? JOHN.
DEAR JOHN: I think she is a refined and sensible person. It's only too evident that she isn't as yet ready to indicate that there is more than friendship between you, and she is handling matters with good taste and discretion.
