here is probably nothing more sought after. Sometimes we get to thinking that peace of mind de-pends on circumstances. But some mons are at peace in the midst of battle, while others cannot find it in a walled garden. To have peace, we do not have to wait until the nations are at peace; the nations wait on us. What is outside of us may it easier for us to learn to be at peace, but peace is for hard as well as easy times. It is not a lucky accident, the result of good fortune. Those who have peace of mind can meet good fortune profitably and misfortune profitably. Peace is an inward, not an outward state. When we have attained to the spiritual qualities on which peace depends, things have no power to disturb our peace; if we do not have the qualities we have no assurance of peace even if things outside of us happen to e in order. Peace is an achievement. Peace is a discipline we put upon our-selves. It is freedom from fear. It
