MISS MARIAN ANDERSON

MISS ALTHEA GIBSON

MISS DINAH WASHINGTON

Miss Marian Anderson, top photo, announced her retirement as a concert artist last Thursday during New York press conference. The internationally famous contralto, 55, said she will begin her farewell concert tour next October, climaxing it with an Easter Sunday concert at Carnegie Hall on April 18, 1964. Center picture shows Miss Althea Gibson as she announced that she would begin a career in professional golf, becoming the first of her race to do so. Miss Gibson, who was a tennis protégé of Dr. Hubert A. Eaton, Wilmington, N. C., spent several years in the Tar Heel State. She also holds the Wimbledon championship in tennis. The late Miss Dinah Washington, shown in bottom photo, died early last Saturday morning, reportedly of an overdose of sleeping pills in her Detroit, Mich., home. Known as the "Queen of the Blues," an official ruling in her death will not be made until an autopsy report is complete in about two weeks. She is remembered in this area for her currently popular hit tune, "What A Difference A Day Makes." (UPI PHOTO).
