simply mean, bestowing your goods upon the poor? Ferret out this word, ye gospel teachers-it has a deeper meaning. Does not every christian cherish it in his own bosom? does it not bless them in their pilgrimage here be low? does it not conduct them to the presence of their God? When faith is lost in sight, hope in fruition, does not the love of God (or charity) remain, binding the spirits of the redeemed in blissful communion, and uniting them to God the Father, and Christ the Elder Brother?

Our George was a great Bible reader. When a person searches the scriptures daily there is a cause for it. Some read for argument—not so with George: he never argued on scripture. Did he not read to gain instruction? I think he did: and I believe he gained it too.

My God, incline the heart of every reader to search the scripture, as I believe George's heart was inclined. Throughout his sickness he was never known to murmur-he bore everything with great fortitude. He would often say: There is a better day ahead for me. He had a great many misfortunes and sore heart-rending trials. I don't believe that Job ever had worse trials nor do I believe he bore them with more patience and fortitude. But, now his sufferings are over, and his soul

He left a devoted wife and five children to mourn their loss, with many friends to grieve that such should be their lot. But, He that stood by the husband and father in death, has promised to be a husband to the widow and a father to the fatherless, and will watch over and protect them.

None of his own relatives, except his family, were near him when he died, tho' a host of friends supplied their places and weptsad tears bedewed each cheek for George. Homes were deserted and business stoppedbut all could not stay the hand of Death, that summoned him where there was

No mother to cool his burning brow. Nor press it to her breast; No father's prayer to waft his soul To the land of joy and rest. No Sister there to say, Farewell! Nor kiss his pale wan cheek; No brother there a tear to shed, . Nor a gentle word to speak

But, friends were there, who stood And watched his flustering breath: Who wiped the death-damp from his brow, And closed his eyes in death. His weeping wife knelt o'er his couch, And prayed: Oh, God of love!

Relieve his aching head from pain; Receive his soul above.

Oh, what a glorious hope is theirs:
Who in God's mercy trust: Their spirits bask in joy and love, While the body goes to dust. A little while, and we all too, Must know our final doom-May we, like George, at last find rest In heaven, with Christ at home.
