

Agle Is Cited As Active Showman

(Showmen's Trade Review.)
Our idea of an active showman is R. E. Agle, who headquarters at the Appalachian Theatre in Boone, a small college town in western North Carolina, as district manager for the Statesville Theatre Co. And when we say active—we mean just that. Just as we had begun to list a few activities, along came another. So here we go again.
Well, for one thing, Showman Agle was named, for the second time, Watauga county chairman of the recent March of Dimes drive—a selection based, it would appear, on his ability as a go-getter.
Showman Agle is alert in every tie-up possibility. Time was when local residents could call their friends via telephone without using a number, but the telephone company soon changed that by issuing a directory. When more names were added, the Boone theatreman performed a public service by listing them (and their numbers) on a handbill which he distributed to homes and business places. The accessory contained a message about his current attraction, plus the statement that the theatre would call one telephone number a day, and if the person receiving the call could tell what was playing, he or she would receive a guest ticket to the theatre.
Well, that's all right as far as it goes. In fact, it's swell. But we're not through yet.
When Agle heard that Appalachian State Teachers College was holding S. P. (secret passion) Week, during which time the girls pay for everything, he took the bull by the horns and placed a display on the campus inviting the girls to pay their own way to a special matinee of "Monogram's" "Jiggs and Maggie in Society," and bring in their S. P.'s free of charge.

We'll stop here now, but you can bet that before these lines are set in type, Agle will have put over another smart piece of showmanship.
And, by golly, he has. Just reaching our desk is a handbill tieup with a local hardware store in connection with 20th-Fox's "The Shocking Miss Pilgrim." Tie-in copy points out that "it's really shocking the impression we can make on our summer friends through a clean, courteous town by cleaning up and painting up." Copy further points out that all the equipment necessary can be purchased at the hardware store, then adds the information that "The Shocking Miss Pilgrim" is playing at the Appalachian.
Now take it easy for a few minutes, Mr. Agle. We can't keep up with you.
