Teen-agers Are Fashion Conscious

The teen-ager is very fashion-conscious. At this tender age it is important for growing girls to have the right kind of clothes.

This does not mean expensive clothes or clothes that are correct in the eyes of their parents. It means clothes like those the rest of the "crowd" wears.

The big favorite for school wear remains the sweater and skirt, but they are becoming neat and stylish and designed to look good.

The choice of evening dresses and "dress-up" clothes is varied. The main fight most mothers have is to keep their daughters from wearing clothes too old for them.

Brassieres and panty-girdles, with the youthful figure in mind, are made by almost all of the foundation companies.

Even costume jewelry, sealed for young girls, can be found.

A United Nations economic report said the Communist countries were steadily increasing their industrial production, but with food supplies lagging.
