United Nations estimates now forecast that by the year 2000 there'll probably be between 6 and 7 billion. The United States, with 180 million now will most likely pass the 3 hundred million mark in the next 40 years. In our business-communications-this growth means a lot of planning ahead to meet the needs of our fast-growing population, and you may be sure we're not sleeping at the switchboard!

TELEPHONE MILESTONE-Just to back me up about not sleeping at the switchboard, here's news about an event that happened recently in this country. The 60 millionth telephone in the Bell System was installed! Actually, America's telephone "population" is now more than 75 million, including the stations operated by the 3,500 Independent companies. You know, the more phones there are, the more valuable telephone service becomes to everyone.
