Pruning Of White Pines Can Pay Off Handsomely

Pruning can increase the value of fast-growing white pines by as much as $700 per acre.

"Because of its high value, the white pine is one of the most important trees growing on farms in Western North Carolina," says Leonard Hampton, Extension forest management specialist for N. C. State College.

Hampton says the amount of profit you can make on white pines depends on four main things:

1. How much it costs to prune.
2. The value of clear lumber grown.
3. How much clear lumber is grown.
4. The time required to grow it.

"The best part about it is that you can have krotty pine for paneling as well as clear lumber," says Hampton. "The upper logs (above 17 feet) containing solid green limbs produce the best paneling."

Dead limbs—and even live ones—must be pruned if clear lumber is to be produced, says Hampton. "The limbs may hang on for years after they die," he points out.

Hampton says that pruning costs, in general, are related to the number of trees pruned per acre and the size of the tree when pruned.

"Other things to consider are pruning tools and methods, stand density, number and size of limbs removed," he says.

Studies have shown that pruning time and costs vary from seven to 11 cents per tree, depending on size and liminess. These costs are based on 75-cent-per-hour labor.

Total cost per acre is $7 to $11, for 100 pruned trees from four to seven inches in diameter at chest height.

For further information on how to make your white pines pay off more, see your county Extension agent.

Two Colleges Become 4-Year

Raleigh—Although all definite plans for the change-over have not yet been worked out, both Mars Hill College in the mountains of Western North Carolina and Campbell College of Bules Creek, in Harnett County, will be converted to regular four-year schools offering BA and BS degrees by 1965.

In literature going out to prospective students, Mars Hill refers to its "senior college curriculum" being planned. Campbell, which will add a third year in 1961, is expected to drop various high school courses which have been available there since its establishment.
