Family Situation Not What It Used To Be, Says Extension Specialist

All of us remember that old song, "The Old Grey Mare, She Ain't What She Used To Be." Well, the family isn't what it used to be either. Let us take a look at the family situation.

Miss Frances Jordan, family relations specialist for the N. C. Agricultural Extension Service, says the most significant differences in the cycle of the family today as compared with 50 years ago relate to birth, marriage and death. We marry at a younger age and have a shorter period of child-bearing.

Children are launched from the home into career or marriage when parents are under 50 and the succeeding middle-aged period when the couple is alone at home is a phenomenon not enjoyed by most families two generations ago. With the increase in life span of the husband and wife, there are more families today where the couple has entered the last stage of the cycle, the aging years.

What are some other factors which are creating changes in family relationships? Miss Jordan says each family unit is no longer an economically independent producing group but rather a unit in which children are a financial liability.

"More goods and services are obtained outside the home creating a shift in the functions of the family unit," reports Miss Jordan. "The family does not exist just for the purpose of providing food, clothing and housing, but assumes the responsibility for the basic personal development of its members."

"We enjoy a higher standard of living today which is due in part to a higher level of education of family members, better health and technological advances," she says. "But with it, we have greater status seeking pressures from business, industry and even our neighbors."

"The employed homemaker is creating sweeping changes in family living today. It is no longer a question of whether she should or should not work, but rather how the family can adjust effectively to the situation. Factors which must be considered include the attitudes of the family members about her working outside the home; the quality of substitute care for children; and the ability of all family members to share the home responsibilities."

Miss Jordan says social security has allowed many couples to retire earlier in life and they are more independent of their children financially and otherwise.

"Another change with far-reaching effects on families is the gradual shift from farm to rural non-farm or urban living," she adds.

"Although it is true that some families do not seem to have the strength to withstand today's demands, the majority of our families in North Carolina are happier than in previous generations," declares Miss Jordan.

BLOOMERS RETURN London—Britain's stores report a booming bloomer business following the blustery blizzards.

The unusual cold weather in London has caused a sell-out on the knee-length underpants. At first the girls bought them as a joke. But later they admitted the mothers knew a "thing or two about keeping warm." The bloomers are long, wooly, warm and unglamorous.

Clinton, Ky. — A young boy who had injured his arm in a fall was brought to the office of Dr. V. A. Jackson.

When the doctor told the lad he would have to take a picture to see if the arm was broken, the lad looked at the doctor and said, as he fought to hold back the tears: "Doctor, do I have to smile?"
