

Washington News

Washington, D. C.—The turbulent Cuba refugee situation could persuade Democrats not to pick Miami Beach for their 1964 national convention.

There is reason to believe, however, that Republicans may have no such reluctance and that they could even regard it as a favorable psychological factor.

Both parties insist here that no decision has been made for or against the Florida city yet and that it will be mid-June before a site verdict is reached.

A key Democratic National Committee source has acknowledged, however, that a "deterioration" of the situation among the Cuban exiles in south Florida has come about subsequent to the visit of the site selection committee to Miami Beach.

On the other hand, Chairman William Miller of the GOP National Committee, has said that the refugee situation won't in any way affect "objective consideration" of Miami Beach by Republicans as a possible convention site for next year.

According to the Democratic spokesman, San Francisco has told the committee it wants to revise its bid upward before a final selection is made by that party.

The West Coast originally had offered $400,000 and said it would try to raise another $150,000 through private subscriptions.

Atlantic City has already offered $550,000 but Miami Beach is still high from a money standpoint with a $600,000 bid to the Democrats.

The same offer has been made to Republican site selectors by the Floridians.

It is generally thought the final decision on the Democratic side will rest very heavily with President Kennedy. If he prefers Chicago, as some reports say, the National Committee professes to know nothing about it and points up the fact that the Windy City has yet made no firm money offer.

Republicans are due to make their final choice just prior to a meeting of the National Committee in late June.

They have received feelers from Atlantic City, San Francisco, Chicago, Dallas, Detroit, and Philadelphia as well as from Miami Beach and expect to narrow that list down to two or three possible locations later this month.

Long-Hair Music

Mrs. John Kirk, music librarian at ASTC, supervises several students at the turn tables in the Music Library. Students may use the records in the music library or check them out for use in the dormitory. Approximately 281 students use the library every week.

Music Library Popular At ASTC

By LARRY PENLEY

The music library at ASTC is becoming one of the most popular spots on the college campus for the cultural development of students.

This is not a place for students to congregate and listen to current "pop tunes." It is a vital part of the instructional program of the college. For many students the music library is a requirement.

In the music library are found some of the well-known composers such as Beethoven, Brahms, Chopin, Debussy, Clemente, Schubert and Pololsky and many others. The library has catalogued both the sheet music and recordings of the composers. This enables the student to look at the sheet music scores and listen to music at the same time.

Rows of turn tables are utilized in the music library and each turn table is equipped with an earphone. Each turn table can be equipped with a listening bar that enables as many as six students to hear the same recording.

The music library, located in the Fine Arts Building, is a part of the regular college library and is staffed by a full-time librarian and nine student assistants. Mrs. John Kirk, librarian, said that the music library maintains the same schedule as the college library and is open approximately 80 hours a week. It is open from 7:45 a. m. until 10 p. m. Monday through Friday.

This library was established for music majors, primary education majors and students taking music and art appreciation courses. In some of the music courses the students are required to listen to a certain selection of recordings and be able to identify the work and the composer.

The library classifies the music as opera, sacred, vocal, instrumental ensemble, key board instruments, strings, wind and percussion. Currently, the music library has 2,000 catalogued records and 1700 catalogued music books and sheet music scores. About 850 music books and 150 records are not catalogued.

Students may use the records in the music library or check them out for use in the dormitory. In addition to records and sheet music the library has a number of tape recorders, projectors and record players that can be checked out by the students. This also includes metronomes and keys for musical instruments that are kept locked. Dr. William Spencer, head of the ASTC music department, said that one of the great advantages to the music student is the convenience of the music library. Piano and organ students have access to sheet music from the library rather than having to purchase the music. Another feature of the music library is the large number of books on artists, paintings and composers. These are classified according to periods and countries. Some classes require the student to be able to identify the works of well-known artists. Mrs. Kirk said that all cataloging for the music library is done in the regular college library. "The services of the music library may soon expand to serve the community as well as the college," Spencer said. Approximately 281 students use the music library every week.
