School And Your Child

By JOHN COREY

This is the season when college admissions directors receive their heaviest mail. Dr. Braxton Harris, assistant registrar in charge of admissions at Appalachian State Teachers College, laments that sometimes it reveals a great deal of "lack of knowledge" about college, both on the part of young people and on the part of their parents.

Here are some basic facts that this group ought to know: In the 1930's, only about one million young people were in college. By 1961, according to the National Education Association, the number had jumped to somewhat over three million, and it's still going up. This means that something over one-third of all young people of college age (18-21) are in school.

The number of colleges in the U. S. continues to increase. In the 1930's there were fewer than 1,000. The 1962-63 Education Directory, just published by the U. S. Office of Education, shows that we have a total of 2,100 institutions of higher education now. Of these, 628 offer at least two years of college work, but less than four. They are, generally speaking, in the junior college or community college class. Many are quite similar to major colleges except in the length of program offered, and the number is growing fast. Last year there were only 593 in this category.

There are today 1,447 degree-granting institutions, of which 223 offer the doctor of philosophy as well as bachelor's and master's degrees.

Only about one in four of the students who start college ever finish. There were 394,889 bachelor's and first-professional degrees conferred in 1960, plus 74,497 second level degrees (usually the master's), and 9,829 doctor's degrees.

There are just twice as many men in college as women.

What do college students study? A survey done at the University of Michigan in 1959 showed the following: agriculture, 1.35%; business, 19%; education, 19.8%; engineering, 13%; biological sciences, 10%; humanities, 11%; physical sciences, 5.6%; social sciences, 9.5%; other, 7.3% undecided, 4%; not reported, 2.1%.

How about the cost of going to college? The same Michigan survey showed that the cost of one year may vary from $500 to $3,540 or more. The average was shown to be $1,550. The figure moves upward a bit year by year, especially when colleges are forced to increase their tuition.

Who pays the bill? Again, the Michigan study shows that 27.8 per cent have their whole way paid by mother and dad. The percentage is higher for girls than for boys. The family paid the way for 21.4 per cent of the men, for 39.5 per cent of the women.

A considerable number paid their way by a combination of money from home and their own earnings. The rest met expenses by various combinations from home, working, and scholarship aid. Just under 9 per cent of the men went through on the basis of their own work and scholarship aid, without a cent from home.

All those indebted to the estate are asked to make immediate payment. This April 27, 1963. Coleen T. Needham, Admin., Triplett, N. C. 5-2-4p
