

Chowan Turkeys Off To Good Start

About 25 Commercial Growers In Chowan County

Colbert Byrum and Isaac Byrum, Jr., brothers of Ryland community, are off to a good start with their turkey production this year. Turkey Specialist W. C. Mills visited these growers with County Agent C. W. Overman last week.

Colbert Byrum has a flock of turkeys about three months of age on range. He is using automatic feeders and waterers which result in considerable labor saving. This grower also has a flock of young poult about two weeks of age in his brooder houses.

Isaac, Jr., has a flock of turkeys about three months of age which he is raising in confinement. These are housed on a wired platform where they have self feeders and self waterers being used. Isaac, Jr., also has a young flock of poult about two weeks of age in his brooder houses.

Both of these growers are following good turkey production practices. The brooder houses have wired floors so that the droppings fall through and sanitary conditions will be maintained in the brooder houses. Automatic waterers are being used but small feeders are necessary for the young poult. Both growers are practicing debeaking of poult when about two weeks of age so as to avoid feather picking.

There are about 25 commercial turkey growers in Chowan County. Most of these raise one flock of turkeys each year, starting their

TAYLOR THEATRE

EDENTON, N. C.
Saturday Continuous from 1:30
Sunday, 2:15, 4:15 and 8:45

Thursday and Friday,
May 16-17—

Markon Brandó, Glenn Ford and Machiko Kyo in
"THE TEAHOUSE OF THE AUGUST MOON"
CinemaScope with Stereophonic Sound
Show Starts 3:30
Features 4:00-6:40 and 9:20
T. R. TYNCH, JR.

Saturday, May 18—

Double Feature
Randolph Scott in
"THE WALKING HILLS"
—also—
John Payne in
"LARCENY"
MRS. FRED ASHLEY

Sunday and Monday,
May 19-20—

Gregory Peck and Lauren Bacall in
"DESIGNING WOMAN"
CinemaScope with Stereophonic Sound
Sunday Shows 2:00-4:15-8:45
Monday Shows Start 3:30
Features 4:10-6:45-9:20
MADISON PHILLIPS

Tuesday and Wednesday,
May 21-22—

Double Feature
Victor Jory in
"THE MAN WHO TURNED TO STONE"
—also—
Greg Palmer in
"ZOMBIES OF MORA TAU"
MRS. J. R. PEELE

Drive-In Theatre

HI-WAY 17
Edenton-Hertford Road
EDENTON, N. C.
OPEN EVERY NIGHT

Friday and Saturday,
May 17-18—

Robert Taylor in
"THE LAST HUNT"
CinemaScope
MRS. WILLIE WEST

Sunday, May 19—

Roy Calhoun in
"RAW EDGE"
MRS. LEON HALSEY

Monday and Tuesday,
May 20-21—

Dan Dailey in
"MEET ME IN LAS VEGAS"
CinemaScope

Wednesday and Thursday,
May 22-23—

Jayne Mansfield in
"THE GIRL CAN'T HELP IT"
CinemaScope

NOTE: If your name appears in this ad, bring it to the Taylor Theatre box office and receive a free pass to see one of

Senator Scott reports from WASHINGTON

President Eisenhower's campaign to keep his budget intact has come too late.

This is particularly true in respect to his efforts to save many of the foreign aid programs he has proposed.

The nationwide television speeches will help, but they are too little too late.

When it comes to their pocket-books, the American people won't be charmed by broad smiles and a warm personality. They want facts and figures and reasons behind them, especially when they were led to believe during the election campaign that government spending was being reduced.

The subject of government spending has brought me more mail, telegrams and telephone calls in the past two months than any other one thing since I have been in the Senate.

Immediately after the President asked Congress for a $72 billion budget, the largest in peacetime history, it was apparent that the general public was irritated, in fact bitter, about the whole business.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

Immediately after the President asked Congress for a $72 billion budget, the largest in peacetime history, it was apparent that the general public was irritated, in fact bitter, about the whole business.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

Immediately after the President asked Congress for a $72 billion budget, the largest in peacetime history, it was apparent that the general public was irritated, in fact bitter, about the whole business.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

Immediately after the President asked Congress for a $72 billion budget, the largest in peacetime history, it was apparent that the general public was irritated, in fact bitter, about the whole business.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

Immediately after the President asked Congress for a $72 billion budget, the largest in peacetime history, it was apparent that the general public was irritated, in fact bitter, about the whole business.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

Immediately after the President asked Congress for a $72 billion budget, the largest in peacetime history, it was apparent that the general public was irritated, in fact bitter, about the whole business.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

Immediately after the President asked Congress for a $72 billion budget, the largest in peacetime history, it was apparent that the general public was irritated, in fact bitter, about the whole business.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

Immediately after the President asked Congress for a $72 billion budget, the largest in peacetime history, it was apparent that the general public was irritated, in fact bitter, about the whole business.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

When hearings on various items in the budget started in Congress, the Administration sent agent after agent before congressional committees with strong pleas to keep it intact.

Almost without exception, the President has bridled and pawed each time Congress suggests places where the budget should be cut.

But yet, the President says it's Congress' duty to cut it where it sees fit.

With each new outcry he makes it becomes more difficult to tell how he really feels about his own budget.

In each instance, he thinks Congress and the people should have "faith" in the money he asks.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

Immediately after the President asked Congress for a $72 billion budget, the largest in peacetime history, it was apparent that the general public was irritated, in fact bitter, about the whole business.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

Immediately after the President asked Congress for a $72 billion budget, the largest in peacetime history, it was apparent that the general public was irritated, in fact bitter, about the whole business.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

Immediately after the President asked Congress for a $72 billion budget, the largest in peacetime history, it was apparent that the general public was irritated, in fact bitter, about the whole business.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

Immediately after the President asked Congress for a $72 billion budget, the largest in peacetime history, it was apparent that the general public was irritated, in fact bitter, about the whole business.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

Immediately after the President asked Congress for a $72 billion budget, the largest in peacetime history, it was apparent that the general public was irritated, in fact bitter, about the whole business.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

Immediately after the President asked Congress for a $72 billion budget, the largest in peacetime history, it was apparent that the general public was irritated, in fact bitter, about the whole business.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

Immediately after the President asked Congress for a $72 billion budget, the largest in peacetime history, it was apparent that the general public was irritated, in fact bitter, about the whole business.

As soon as he saw the public reaction to his budget, President Eisenhower passed the buck to Congress with a statement that it was Congress' duty to cut any and all fat from it that could be found.

As wishy-washy as he has been in the past about spending in general, his speeches to save his budget won't have much effect on Congress.

The people back home have let Congress know how they feel about spending, and Congress has made up its mind to do something.

The biggest cuts will probably come in the field of foreign relations—that is, foreign aid and our various diplomatic operations. In all, with many domestic expenditures certain to be reduced also, it appears about $3 billion will be cut from the original requests.

Cooperative Lamb Pool In Plymouth

Growers Who Are Interested Urged to Contact Overman

The 1957 cooperative lamb pool will be held at Plymouth Tuesday morning, May 21, according to County Agent C. W. Overman.

The annual cooperative lamb pool will be held at the old freight station in Plymouth. Grading will start at 7 A. M. The earlier growers arrive and get in line, the earlier they can get unloaded and away.

Growers should be sure to keep their sales slips, take them to the ASC office in Edenton and make application for their incentive payment for wool on the lambs.

Sheep growers who have marketed their lambs through the pool in the past have found it a profitable way to sell their lambs, Mr. Overman says. Growers who are interested in selling their lambs in the pool this year should notify Mr. Overman immediately. This is important in order that arrangements can be made for rail cars to hold them.

White accessories. She carried a white prayer book topped with a white orchid.

Mrs. Whichard Davis, sister-in-law of the bride, was maid of honor and only attendant. She wore a light blue dress with white accessories and wore a corsage of white carnations.

Whichard Davis, brother of the bride, was best man.

The bride's mother wore a navy blue crepe dress with matching accessories. Her corsage was baby iris.

The bride attended Perquimans High School. She has been employed as secretary at the Don Juan Manufacturing Company for the past four years. The bridegroom attended school in Lynn, Ky., and has been in the army since 1947. He has been stationed in Alaska for the past 18 months.

The young couple left for a wedding trip to visit his parents in Kentucky, then on to Alaska where he will be stationed for three years.

The living room was decorated with spring flowers.

The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Philip Quideley, pastor of the bride.

The bride wore a light blue dress of princess with a net yoke and

Mrs. Geo. A. Byrum Hostess For Meeting

Mrs. Fred Bunch, clothing leader, presented a demonstration on "Well-Dressed At Small Cost" at the monthly meeting of Enterprise Home Demonstration Club. Mrs. Bunch emphasized that it was not necessarily the wealthiest women who dressed the best, but it was those who did a lot of planning before buying. The women were urged to plan their wardrobe around a basic color as navy, brown, or black.

The club met with Mrs. George Alma Byrum with ten members present. The meeting was opened with the members singing "Church in the Wildwood." After the demonstration, the hostess served delicious refreshments.

Strictly Legal
"Where's the boss?" a customer asked.

"He's out attending to legal business," the clerk replied. "Legal business," exclaimed the customer irritably. "That's the same thing you told me yesterday, and later I saw him in a restaurant drinking beers."

"Well," replied the clerk, "drinking beer is now legal, isn't it?"

Weekly Devotional Column
By JAMES MacKENZIE

Here are some recent religious news items that will be of interest to readers of this column:

By the time you read this the Billy Graham New York Crusade will be in progress (begins Wednesday night, May 15). The need there is great: There are fewer professing Christians in New York than in Hong Kong; less than two percent of the population of the city may be found in Protestant churches on any Sunday morning.

In years past New York has been stirred by the inspired preaching of such great men of God as Charles Finney, D. L. Moody and Billy Sunday. That prince of American preachers, T. DeWitt Talmage, served as pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church there for over a quarter of a century, preaching to crowds of four and five thousand Sunday after Sunday.

ANTIQUE'S

—AT—

BYRUM'S

GIFT SHOP

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.

Edenton, N. C.