The case arose because in the believe in properly-run labor majority of our states, rural unions, but in neither the union voters have substantially more shop or the closed shop, and a power in selecting members of element in state legislatures will enhance such compulsory they should have. The correct membership.

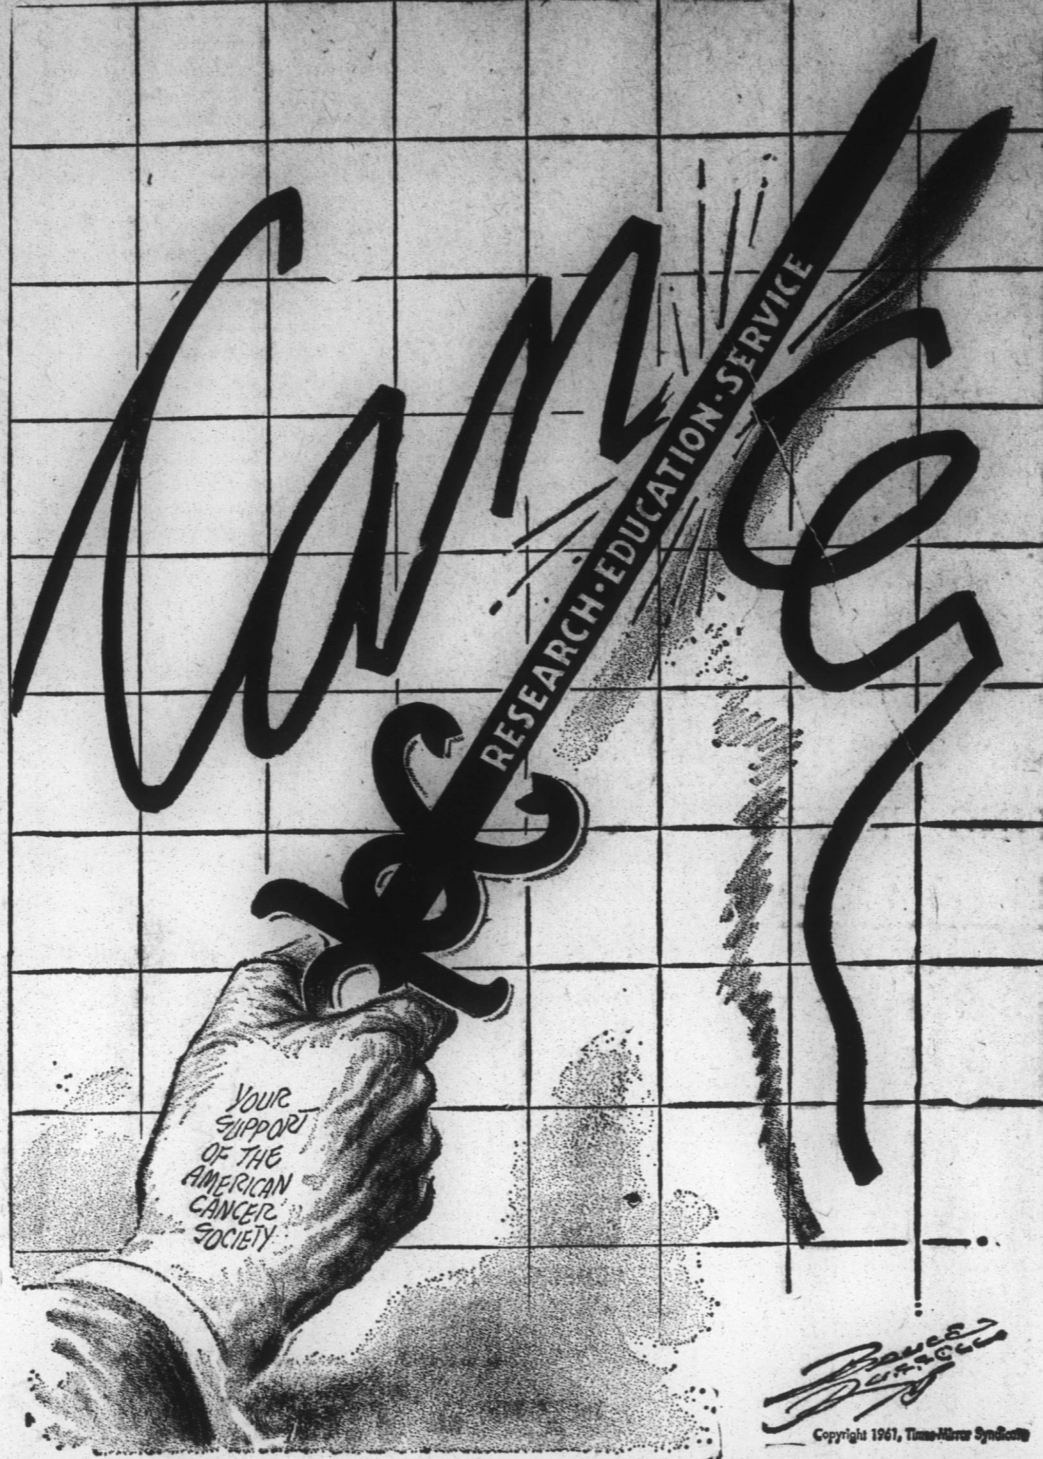

It also is the non-conserva- tives who believe in concentrat- ing power in the hands of gov- ernment. We already have moved far in that direction, both at the state level and in the federal government. In the Congress, conservatives today have a hard time fighting off unsound measures, and if still more non-conservatives are elected to either the House or the Senate, such victories will become impossible.

Now all these are long-term effects. It will take years for this court decision to work its way through our political struc- ture. But this does not lessen its significance, and there is no way that it can be offset.

"The Last Supper" Topic At C.D.M.C.
