

Annual Peanut Field Day At Lewiston Test Station Today

The 10th annual Peanut Field Day will be conducted today (Thursday) at the Peanut Belt Research Station at Lewiston.

The morning program which is the annual membership meeting of the N. C. Peanut Growers Association gets under way at 10 A. M. Commissioner of Agriculture L. Y. Ballentine and members of his staff will begin the program by reviewing "The Peanut Belt Research Station, 1952-1962." Other morning activities include presentation of 1961 Two-Ton Peanut Club awards and an address by Harold Feder of the Fisher Nut Company, St. Paul, Minn. The Fisher Nut Company is the world's largest user of roasting stock peanuts.

The afternoon program will be devoted almost entirely to peanut insect control. Dr. W. V. Campbell will begin the program by showing and giving the results of his research work on insect control this year. R. L. Robertson will follow with a 1963 practical insect control program for N. C. peanut growers.

Following the discussion on insect control there will be a display and demonstrations of dusting and spraying equipment for use on peanuts by J. C. Ferguson and John Glover. All manufacturers of equipment used in peanut production have been invited to display their latest equipment on the grounds.

The field day program this year was designed to answer questions about the biggest problem, insect control. In addition to this, however, growers will be able to see the newest items in all types of equipment.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

are called Christian and are not condoning actions and attitudes that are not good, that members of churches are doing are not in harmony with Jesus' teachings and are not worthy of His followers. We need to be told so frankly, and to heed and repent. If we do not, it may well be true that the axe is already laid at the root of the tree and that we are doomed.

John's fearlessness is shown also in this lesson in his frank application of repentance to particular groups. He touched the shoe where it pinched. The multitude who came to hear John seems to have been an affluent group. Apparently they needed to repent of their complacent enjoyment of their blessings, with complete disregard of those who had nothing. The fruit befitting repentance for the man who had two coats was to share it with him who had none.

The promise of the application of this idea has won many people to communism, although such sharing has been carried out by force in some areas under this system. We believe there is great danger and much evil when sharing is forced. Repentance touches home here. As a people of abundance we must learn as individuals and as a group that we cannot continue to wear many coats and to eat of the fat of the land while multitudes of peoples around the world are naked and hungry. Finding the wisest and most Christian way of sharing our goods in this complex world in which we live will require not only the compassionate heart but the keenest minds and the clearest thinking. Both are needed in the work of the Kingdom, for the sharing must be done.

Under the system of tax collection of that time the collector was required to turn in to the government a certain sum of money. All that he could collect beyond that amount he was permitted to keep as salary. It is not to be wondered that corruption and graft were rampant. But even within such a system, John demanded that they collect no more than their due. Certain systems of business today lend themselves to graft and exploitation. At times it may seem impossible to function successfully within these systems and at the same time reject all dishonorable proceedings. Yet to the Christian, "Take no more than your due" would still apply. John's call to repentance and righteous acts still functions for us in our world today.
