

Hairy Indigo New Summer Crop In Chowan

David Lee Hollowell is shown above observing a young stand of hairy indigo that he tried last year as a new summer cover crop.

Hairy indigo is a relatively new summer cover crop for Chowan County. It is a summer annual legume adapted to any of the well-drained soils in the county. Milton Evans, David Lee Hollowell, Fred Castellio, Thomas Rogerson, J. B. Hollowell, Roger Spivey and Paul Ober are a few Chowan farmers that have tried hairy indigo. They all seem well pleased with its results. The seed are non-toxic and it is not a host plant for the diseases and nematodes that attack our crops today. The common variety does not reseed in North Carolina; therefore it cannot become a pest in other crops.

He qualified for the convention through his sales record for the past 18 months.

The convention will begin June 10 and will end June 14. While in New York City, Mr. and Mrs. Saunders will be the is in the feed grain program, this is a good place to try some indigo. It can be seeded in almost any crop before the last cultivation. Paul Ober sowed indigo in his watermelons before the last cultivation last year and said that the watermelons were harvested before the indigo got in the way. The plants start off growing slow at first and the weeds may look bad, but after a few weeks the indigo will take over. It grows from three to seven feet tall depending on the land and season. The seed should be broadcast at the rate of 8-10 lbs. per acre up until and into June. Seed are available from local seed dealers this year. Hairy indigo is an eligible summer cover crop under the 1964 ACP program at the rate of $2.00 per acre.

W. A. Gerald, Vice President of Pilot, called Saunders "substantial production of new business and service to policyowners during the period an outstanding effort on his part".
