

The Roundup

By WILBORNE HARRELL

The devious thinking of the East is hard to understand. Apropos the Vietnam attacks on our gunboats, Red China says our retaliation was an act of aggression. Yet we were in the right at all times. Our gunboats were in international waters, where they had every right to be, and where an unprovoked attack was made on them. We returned their fire in self defense, and later made further strikes on North Vietnam military installations. On all of these counts we were legally and morally in the right, of law, of conscience and national responsibility. The motive of the Communists is somewhat obscure, but it is the consensus of military men and observers that the attacks were primarily a probe to see just how much we would take, or how far we would go in defence or retaliation. Now they know.

PHIL OSOPHER SAYS: Don't argue—let the other fellow blow his top.

No wonder we Americans are becoming to be known as a nervous people. I read somewhere recently that nine million American kids were learning to play some sort of musical instrument. And if nine million kids plunking or strumming or blowing on musical instruments is not just cause for nervousness, then I don't know what is.

Here is something I ran across the other day in my reading, which I thought was good advice, and so I will pass it on to you. "... I am too old to regret what could not be helped, or try to recover what has long been lost." I have adopted these words as my cardinal rule of life.

One of my pet peeves is the fellow who tells a joke and then proceeds to elaborate at great length to explain its meaning or point. In my opinion, if the point of a joke is lost on the person it is told to, you are wasting valuable time trying to explain further.

Wistful Thinking

I don't ask for much. I'd just like to have 1964 wages, 1934 prices and 1904 taxes. —The Republican, Lanford, N. D.
