

State Pushing Safety Inspection Requirements News From Merry Hill

Failure to observe the deadline for having automobiles inspected is bringing fines to more and more motorists throughout North Carolina, according to officials at the Department of Motor Vehicles.

The deadline for having a car inspected is midnight on the last day of the month that is punched on the windshield. Drivers who have not taken notice of their inspection deadline are subject to fines up to $50 and court costs.

"Many people are neglecting to consult the sticker and are being fined for violations when they allow their cars to run over the deadline," said Roger Parker, Inspection Administrator. "Some think they are still having their cars inspected by the last digit on their license plate and others say they expect the department to notify them in advance of the expiration date," Parker added.

In both cases the driver of a car with an expired sticker may be due for day in court. When he is caught with an expired sticker he will be given a citation which will probably result in a fine. Last year the date for the first inspection was determined by the last digit on the license plate. But this was done in order to stagger the inspection dates so that everyone would not have to have his car examined at the same time. Now, the lone factor determining the inspection date is on the windshield of the car.

"We can't notify every driver of his own responsibility," Parker said. "Each driver must take it upon himself to glance at the sticker on his windshield. In doing so, he may save himself a combination of time, trouble and money."

Parker noted that some people apparently are not aware that they can have their vehicles inspected at any time prior to their deadline. He suggested that those whose vehicles are due a second inspection by May 31 may avoid a last minute rush by having their cars examined during the remainder of April and early May.

Niran 10-G controls rootworms in peanuts... gives you extra benefits, too

SOUTHERN CORN ROOTWORM. THE LARVAL FORM OF THE SPOTTED CUCUMBER BEETLE. ATTACKS PEGS, PODS, AND KERNELS.

Granular Niran 10-G costs you less...has been proved in years of field use...is easy to apply at pegging time.

Niran 10-G soil insecticide, the first parathion granule ever to be recommended for effective southern corn rootworm control in peanuts, still sets the standard for low-cost, efficient peanut crop protection. Carefully formulated to meet

Virginia-Carolina soil and climate conditions, Niran 10-G has been field proved by hundreds of farmers in your area since its introduction in 1965. You simply cannot buy a better parathion soil insecticide!

Use Niran 10-G at pegging time. Effective control and low cost aren't the only extra benefits going for Niran 10-G. It is applied at pegging time, not planting time. It won't damage the peanut plant, so you can forget about any set-back. And there is no residue to worry about. Peanut hay is safe to use for silage. Niran 10-G controls costly rootworms . . . then breaks down into harmless compounds and disappears.

Specially processed to remove dust. Like all insecticides, Niran 10-G is a powerful chemical. But it is carefully processed to get rid of undesirable fine dust and to minimize blowing. Be sure to read the directions on the label and follow them to the letter. You'll get better results . . . safely. You can spend more for rootworm control—but why waste money? You also can spend less—but you won't get the extra benefits of proved Niran 10-G. Ask your dealer about Niran 10-G. Or write: Monsanto Company, Agricultural Division, St. Louis, Mo. 63166.
